Beverly of Graustark

was flushed and bright with happiness. The kiss he bestowed upon the delighted Candace was tender in the extreme. Then, putting her from the street over and gallantly kissed the hand of Graustark's princess, beaming an ecstatic smile upon the merry Beverly as instant later.

"Welcome, Prince Dantan," said Lorry. "A thousand times welcome."

"All Graustark is your throne, most glorious Yetive. That is why I have asked to be presented here and not in the royal hall below," said Ravone.

"You will wait here with us, then, to hear the good news from our warden," said the princess. "Send the courier to me," she commanded. "Such sweet news should be received in the place which is dearest to me in all Graustark."

The ministers and the lords and ladies of the realm were assembled in the room when Baron Danglees appeared with the courier from the prison. Count Marlanx was missing. He was on his way to the fortress, a crushed fugitive, inspected old man. In his quarters he was to sit and wait for the hour that he knew could not be averted. Down there in his quarters, with his pain and his shame, he was nursing his brain for means to lessen the force of that blow. Ravone had heard the charges against Baldos, but he could not soften the words he had said and written of Beverly Calhoun. He was still troubling himself with fear because of the adventures in the chapel and passage. He knew too well how Yetive could punish when her heart was bitter against an evildoer. Graustark bothered and protected its women.

The warden of the dungeons from which Gabriel had escaped months before reported to the princess that the prisoner was again in custody. Briefly he related that a party of men led by Prince Dantan had appeared early that day, bringing the fugitive prince unmanacled, but roped by rope and disappointment. They had taken him into following them through the hills, intent upon slaying his brother Dantan. Their credit he was as a Gabriel's identity. In conclusion the warden explored her highness to send troops to guard the person of the manikin side. He feared an attack in force to Gabriel's army.

"You have said Lorry, "I have sent instructions to Colonel Brate, requiring him to take a large force of men into the pass to guard the prison. Gabriel shall not escape again, though all Dawsbergen armies after him."

"You have had a letter from Dawsbergen," said Ravone, who was seated near the princess, Candace at his side. Messages have been brought to me from the leading nobles of Dawsbergen assuring me that the populace is secretly with me and the Baldos be removed. Only the desperate fear of Gabriel and a few of his bloody but loyal followers holds them in check. Believe me, Dawsbergen's efforts to release Gabriel will be perfunctory and half-hearted in the extreme. He is reviled like a madman. It was his infamous implacable desire to kill his brother that led to his undoing. With it he strange, your highness, if Dawsbergen welcomes the return of Dantan to the throne?"

"The story! The story of his capture! Tell me the story," came eagerly from those assembled. The prince nodded haughtily, his face fired and cheeks like roses, as if the mere recounting of his hardships past was hard to do.

"Lorry, your highness, may I advise that you tell the story of your brother's ultimatum to the people of Dawsbergen?" asked Yetive. This time say to them that you hold two Dawsbergen officers as your hand. One cannot send them until he restored to them. The officers will be released on demand. Let this be reported to meet the Duke of Mirrox. He is now with the army of Dawsbergen. Tell them that if a single hair of your highness, I have mentioned the liberty of distributing the heads of the officers on the highway. The two Dawsbergen officers are speaking to the Duke of Mirrox. Let him know small, who attacked a woman in Graustark. His only hope was that the prince might make an exception in the case of one who had been the head of the army, but the hope was too slender to cling to.

Baldos walked forth a free man, the plaudits of the people in his ears. Baron Dangloss and Colonel Quinnox were beside the tall guard as he came forward to receive the commendations and apologies of Graustark's ruler and the warm promises of reward from the man he served.

He knelt before the two rulers who were holding court on the veranda. The cheers of soldiers, the shouts of soldiery, the acclamations of the ladies, did not turn his confident head. His was the born knight. The look of triumph that he bestowed upon Beverly Calhoun, who lounged gracefully beside the stone balustrade, brought the red flying to her cheeks. He took some thing from his breast and held it gallantly to his lips before all the assembled courtiers. Beverly knew that it was a foiled rose!

CHAPTER XXX.

THE next morning a royal message was sent to the Count Marlanx.

He bore two sealed letters to the princess. One briefly informed him that General Baldos was his successor as commander in chief of the army of Graustark. He hesitated long before writing the other. It was promptly brief and to the point. The count's fourth name, together with a sign manual, he read the signature of the princess at the end. There was no response. She had strung her bow and sped the arrow. He looked at it for a while. It was 11 o'clock. The edict gave him twenty-four hours from the noon of the next day. The gray old soldier dispatched a messenger for his man of affairs, a lawyer of high standing in Edelweiss. Together they remained until midnight. Shortly after daybreak the morning following Count Marlanx was in the train for Vienna, never to set foot on Graustark's soil again. He was banished and his estates confiscated by the lawgivers.

The ministry in Edelweiss was not slow to regain negotiations with Graustark. Another ambassador was sent to the prime minister setting forth the new order of affairs and suggesting the instant suppression of hostile preparations and the reopening of Prince Dantan. Accompanying that message was a diplomatic missive from Dantan intimating his people that he awaited their commands. He was in the train for the Henry that had been so deserted. It would be late in reaching Dawsbergen to its expected arrival prospects of action. In the meantime the Duke of Mirror dispatched the news to the Princess Yetive of Axphain, who was forced to admit defeat temporarily at least—her adherents upon Graustark. The capital city put on red to her transformation.

my Beverly—but it was for the best. In defense of my honor and dignity, however, I must tell you that the principal has known for many days that I am Dastan. I told her the truth when Bethsbal came that day with the news. It was all well enough for me to pass myself off as a vagabond, but it would have been unpardonable to foist him upon her as the prince."

"And she has known for a week?" cried Beverly in chagrin.

"And the whole court has known."

"I alone was blind?"

"As blind as the proverb. Thank God, I won your love as a vagabond. I can treasure it as the richest of my princely possessions. You have said and you will go to my castle with me, dear?"

She leaned forward unsteadily, and he took her in his eager arms. Their lips met, and their eyes closed in the ecstasy of bliss. After a long time she lifted her lids, and her eyes of gray looked solemnly into his dark ones.

"I have much to ask you about, many explanations to demand, sir," she said threateningly.

"By the rose that shields my heart, you shall have the truth," he laughed back at her. "I am still your servant. My allegiance is endless. I shall always serve your highness."

"Your highness!" she murmured reflectively. Then a joyous smile of realization broke over her face. "Isn't it wonderful?"

"Do you think your brothers will let me come to Washington now?" he asked tenderly.

"It does seem different, doesn't it?" she murmured with a strange little smile. "You will come for me?"

"To the ends of the earth, your highness."

"A WOMAN'S style," Marvin Rowell read from an old fashioned book, adding, with a little laugh, "I suppose this generation discounts that fine piece of Bisher's sagacity. Women now adays have no style—anything. Instead they are 'fetching' and behold, the things are done."

While serious if anything, that remark about women Marvin reflected, sailing hard at his pipe. "I don't wonder at it," he went on. "You were so fantastically certain Baby Curran would make the most adorable of her feature, Mona, he shot cupidid in a way to astonish everybody."

"Wrong as usual," Norris commented. Marvin shook his head with a lazy laugh, saying: "George, but I'm glad Daddy Curran left nothing but debts and a livery stable to his flock of children. There was nothing for Baby to do—except keep on with the business."

"There was. She taught have married me," Norris interrupted. "She knew I'd look out for her stepmother and the kids."

"No doubt," Marvin broke in, "but that isn't Baby's way of putting it. I remember how at school she wouldn't be told in class or have her sums done for her. Haven't you noticed in her ruling passion—so much so, indeed, I feared to have her go to this Daddy Curran never thought of doubting anybody's word until he had to. I thought Baby was off the same piece. So she is, but she's got something else in her. Her spot cash conscience, she calls it. I heard her explaining to old Major Aston that the way to avoid bad debts was to have no debts at all and let the bank do all the bookkeeping."

Norris drummed hard on the table. "I'm a fool to keep on caring," he burst out, "but I've been aside for the last year's bodnet, won't bear to marrying me until the debts are paid and Mona her self-respect and ready to step into her shoes. That means four years at least. Meantime there's the devil to pay with my people. They're not purse proud, but who can blame them if they don't want to welcome as a daughter a bookkeeping young woman who has made herself the talk of the county, not even though she did it with the best intentions in the world? My mother was at me yesterday, asking me if I wanted a wife who had grown sharp at bargaining with half the horse dealers and teamsters in the country side. It seems Baby is setting up to buy saddle stock—"

"I don't know anybody with a better right. She knows horses better than the most of us," Marvin interposed. "And, all things considered, it is a good thing. She has her market ready made, as it were. Those city folks take everything of class she can find them and pay her a handsome profit."

"You seem to hold a brief for her," Norris said sulkily, a gleam of suspicion in his eyes. "It might be well for you to join hands with her. You might make more at horse dealing than you ever did at the bar."

"Very likely—if I had Baby's chance. But certainly I shan't scheme to take it from her," Marvin said steadily; then, flushing a little, he added: "I would be only too glad to join hands with her in anything—and for life. But she has let me know that's out of the question. When she set you free she left herself bound, little as you deserve it."

The last word was flung over his shoulder. He had risen and was striding toward the door. Norris looked after him, half angrily, half shamedly, then glanced about the handsome appointed office with a scowling sneer. His grandfather had been governor, his father was a senator, his mother led society in Allingham. Naturally she looked high for her only son, much higher than a bankrupt's daughter, who had taken upon her shoulders an unwomanly burden. Still she had not set herself openly against her son's choice. She had even approved, though mildly, his intention of constancy. How, then, should he suspect that she was planning to upset that intention? The image of the plan was Miss Althea Rosewell—a beauty. Miss Althea, if one could have overlooked her nose. Unfortunately it stood out so boldly overlooking it was impossible, even in the effulgence of her many dollars. It was the nose as much as anything else that had made Granville Norris feel so much at ease with her. She had come for a long visit, and Allingham was making much of her, yet somehow she had not been brought face to face with Baby, who had—nowadays little time and less money for ruffling it in the town gayeties. Norris himself saw her but in little snatches. She went and came so uncertainly and at such odd times he could not waylay her and calls were out of the question. "The little new house was so crowded it was impossible to say anything there without having it reach all ears. Norris felt that there was much which ought to be said, but somehow had not yet brought himself to the pitch of saying it.

He got need out of the window, his eyes brightening as they fell upon his mother, driving her pony chaise, with Althea sung beside her. He rushed out to greet them and almost dragged them inside. Very shortly thereafter he went away with them upon an errand he did not in the least relish. Miss Althea had heard of Baby Curran's venture; further, she had sent her pony to a 50c saddle maker to be laid just tonight and sent out to exercise. She meant to have the creature almost any price, so Norris, perforce, went along to see the bargaining. He did not go quite blandly. Though he let never let him self acknowledge it, he was not insensible to the world gain if he could bring himself to marry Miss Rosewell. If he could ever to do that, it was well that she had been fancy-seeing the old. He availed of the thought, hoping against hope for some moment when he could be fair-baby again. But, most inevitably, he felt a rising gladness at sight of her, smiling as well over from the door of the next livery office.

She was sorely distressed sorry, but Black Beauty was not to be bought. She had been invited, indeed upon a special order from the city stable and would be sent there as soon as ever she got a little around in the hands of grooms. Yes, she had got a fine comrade. Yes, she thought Miss Rosewell could not have the nerve in handling, breaking, quadbiting it not for anything at all. Baby shook her curly to keep the sobbing, but she could do nothing else. She had given her word and must keep it, had promised the horse to be under the house to be found and, having found one without a match, was bound to let him have it.

Miss Rosewell had been silken soft at the outset. Finding herself thus with the mare for the sake of what seemed to her a fine spirit, simple, she showed a temper as high as her nose and flaring red scraps. She shall treat, saying to Mrs. Norris in pretended aside: "Isn't it lucky? I didn't really want the mare only to see what a woman horse jockey is like. She's not half looking either. You might take her to Bridge—respectable unless you know better."

Baby heard every word, as Miss Rosewell meant she should. She stepped back, her face going white, then it flamed, hands hanging dolplessly at her sides. Norris likewise heard; he flushed dark. He said nothing—it is stored by his sweetheart. But his mother was calling him, likewise his duty as a court bred. Baby, her head held high, every half apologetic, he followed the trio, retreating figures toward their carriage. Halfway to it he stopped and half turned about to see Marvin standing with Baby's hand in his, her face upturned to his and tears on it. Instantly he flung back to them, but Baby waved him away. When he had gone and the carriage was out of hearing, she said to Marvin, with a little hard breath: "Good Granville. I ought not to blame him. He has maybe caught my faith in spot cash."

Then, most unaccountably, she hid her face in her hands and sobbed hard a minute, but looked up presently, smiling a brave yet piteous smile. Marvin took her hand again and pressed it ever so little, saying in half whisper: "Honey, cry all you want to between now and the New Year. We are going to get married then and live happy ever after."

Baby's answer was a blush and silence, but the wedding came off just a month ahead of the Norris Rosewell affair.

Another Way to Put It.

"A shining example of private virtue and an absurd sacrifice on the altar of honest government" is the description of Robert Toombs of Georgia given in "The Brothers a War." Toombs was a prominent character for many years before the war and served in the two houses of congress about equally. Later he was afterward secretary of state in the Confederate government.

He had a wit and a bluntness of expression, says the author, which made his phrases and reparties widely quoted and made him the delight of appreciative audiences.

A rival candidate, really conspicuous and celebrated for his little ability, in a stump debate pledged the people that if they would send him to congress he would never leave his post during a session to attend the courts, as he unjustly charged Toombs with habitually doing. Toombs disposed of this fling by merely saying:

"You would consider which will hurt the district the more, his constant presence in or my occasional absence from the house."

Where She Comes In.

"I suppose," said Miss Jawback, "that you think it's fun for me to sit up and wait for you every night like this."

"Nope," answered Jawback. "I'm having my fun while you're waiting. You have yours when I get home."—Cleveland Leader.

The Same In the Hat.

In the fifties of the last century there were two young lawyers, Gould and Robinson, practicing in the court at Wiscasset, the shire town of Lincoln county, Me., who were noted for their keen wit and ingenuity in examining witnesses and also for their many severe thrusts at each other.

On one occasion, when Robinson had finished an unusually able argument for his client, containing some stinging allusions to the opposing counsel, Gould, by whom he was followed and who rebutted, Robinson was seen to take a card, write something on it, which was later found to be the Latin words nihil verum (empty head), and drop it into Gould's hat on the table.

Gould's curiosity sent him immediately to investigate. Getting to the table, he took the card from his hat, and, loud enough to be heard all over the courtroom, he read, "Nihil verum."

Turning to the judge, he said, "Your honor, I claim the protection of the court." The judge replied, "You may state your case."

Gould answered: "My case is this, your honor: I see my brother at my right has placed his name in my hat, and what can be his motive if not to claim it as his own? I claim your protection."

The judge, with his face all smiles, answered, "Mr. Gould, you shall be protected."—Boston Herald.

WILES OF THE CHEFS

BANQUET TIDBITS ARE NOT ALWAYS WHAT THEY SEEM

"A Cod and a French Cook Can Work Wonders"—The "Breast of One "Chicken" Has Been Known to Satisfy Twelve Hungry Diners.

It has almost passed into a proverb that many of the dishes served up in cheap restaurants, where nothing is wasted, are, to put it mildly, mysteries. But, on the other hand, most people who patronize fashionable and more ambitious restaurants are generally content to accept the menu for what it is said to be. This blind trust is sometimes abused, and the amount of "faking" which goes on today in some of the best hotels and restaurants would probably surprise those who are uninitiated in the higher branches of the culinary art.

For instance, by the addition of vegetable juice just before being dished up the roast beef of a restaurant or hotel dinner may appear to be of the finest quality, while a skillful chef has very little difficulty in palming off flatfish for sole on epicures who pride themselves on the soundness of their judgment of cooking.

On one occasion some time ago a dinner for seventy-five people was ordered at a well known fashionable restaurant in the upper part of New York. A large consignment of salmon had been previously ordered, but, to the consternation of the chef, the dinner hour slowly approached and still no salmon arrived.

In despair the chef, a Frenchman, decided to "take the bull by the horns" and procure another fish to do duty for the expected salmon. Accordingly he set to work to turn cod cutlets into salmon cutlets, and this rapid transformation was soon effected by an addition of vegetable juice. The waiters, who naturally were aware of this wholesale deception, were, of course, expressly directed to report any complaints to the chef at once. However, to the intense delight of the chef, all passed off well, and on hearing that his subterfuge had not been detected he gleefully exclaimed, "A cod and a French cook can work miracles."

Green peas at certain seasons of the year are naturally a luxury quite beyond the reach of the man of average means, while even caterers for fashionable banquets frequently have the greatest difficulty in getting a sufficiently large quantity to meet the demand. However, to fake peas does not offer any great difficulty in these days of stress, and by adding vegetable coloring matter yellow peas are quite commonly served up at dinner parties along with the duck and flavorless new potatoes, which more often than not they accompany.

Roast veal served with a thick white sauce makes, says a well known chef, a most satisfactory substitute for the breast of chicken, and therefore it does not come altogether as a surprise to learn that the breast of one chicken has been known to satisfy twelve hungry diners.

"The chief take good care of the breast of a chicken," was the comment of a waiter who was being for the first time introduced into the mystery of how to feed a dozen people on a single bird.

Perhaps the cleverest deception practiced by eminent chefs is the art of manufacturing the lobster patty, so dear to the heart of the epicure. This appetizing dainty would at first sight seem to defy even the most ingenious cookery fakir. However, here again the artful chef has overcome apparently insuperable difficulties, and most delicious looking lobster patties are thus not always quite what they are said to be.

The deception is worked in this way: A common crustacean is boiled and the meat carefully chopped off and put into a mortar, while afterward part of the shell is added. The mixture is then vigorously pounded as fine as possible, and on the addition of flavoring it would take the powers of the most critical connoisseur to detect any difference between the gastronomic mixture and the genuine lobster patty.

"The various deceptions I have told you of," remarked a famous chef to the writer, "are naturally not practiced every day, but are only utilized in times of emergency, and these emergency moments arrive more frequently than the trustful customer would like did he but know."

Scull and Skull.

"Sculls" and "skulls" are really one word in origin, and both at various times have been spelled capriciously with a "c" or a "k." Pepys, the diarist, tells how he went on the Thames at one time "in a scull," at another in a "skuiec." The origin of the word is "skulle" or "scolle," a bowl or goblet. While the cranium was obviously how like in shape, a distant resemblance to a bowl was also detected in the necessed out blade of a "scull" as opposed to the flat blade of an our proper.

Talking Behind Her Back.

"Don't you know, dear," said his wife sweetly, "that it is wrong to talk behind a person's back?"

He was trying to button her waist at the time, and really there seemed to be provocation for his remarks.

In the court of his own conscience no guilty man is acquitted.—Juvenal.

THE LONDON COSTER.

He Is the King of the Curb in the British Metropolis.

London's outdoor man is the coster. He is the Ishmael of the gutters. A very jolly Ishmael, it is true, who is more than content to acknowledge the line of demarcation between himself and the true cockney. But, nevertheless, in a modified, twentieth century way he is still the wild man whose hand is against every man's and every man's against his. He is probably the last remnant of the world's odd race of wanderers—the last suggestion of the primitive so-called left to the cities. He is to us town dwellers what the gipsy is to the countryside. His descent seems to spring from the same roving stock. And he is regarded, from a safe distance, with the same contempt by those who don't know him. His habits and his impulses still savor strongly of the days when tribe warred against tribe and every man's arm was for himself and his clan. And, although his pitch is below the curb, his caravan a barrow and his beast of burden a Russian pony, a donkey or himself, he is as free and exclusive as any other lusty scion of the people who live under the skies. Ishmael he is, and Ishmael he chooses to remain. And the chances are ten to one that whoever goes a-fishing for information among the barrows will come back with an empty creel or a fine show of fishermen's tales, for your costier knows both how to keep silence and how to use his tongue picturesquely in defense of his jealously guarded traditions and the internal economies of his existence.—Outing.

THE ELEPHANT.

He Is Good Natured, Docile, Obedient and Long Suffering.

"The elephant is the best natured beast in all wild creation," said a circus man. "Most people have an idea that the big beast is apt to go wrong any time and make all kinds of trouble for everybody. Now, as a matter of fact, I have never but once seen a freak of this kind. Then the result was directly due to the intolerable abuse of that dreaded groom. It struck to me that if some one was putting a steel point or hook into a soft joint of yours or mine many times a day and without any good reason for it we would show temper and tear up things too. The only difference is the elephant has more patience. He is docile, obedient and long suffering. When an elephant gets a little out of sorts there is always some lightweight attendant, it seems, to fly off and say he is 'daffy.' Nine times out of ten the poor elephant has been badly treated, and, as he cannot talk, he does about the only thing he can do and trumpets his disgust or possibly goes a step further and passes his feelings by taking a crack with his trunk at something within reach. Elephants are as kind hearted and tender as women and respond to little attentions the same way, and in the same way, just like a woman, when they get soured, it takes a long while by reversing them again if it can be done at all."

FISHING FOR BIRDS.

Catching Gulls and Albatross With Rod and Line.

Curious though it may seem, it is a fact that birds are caught with rod and line in many parts of the world. The pastime is declared to be almost as fascinating as fishing. Gulls in Newfoundland are caught in this way in large quantities. In Newfoundland fishing for gulls and petrels is an important industry.

The method of bird fishing is practically the same as that of ordinary fishing. Two men go out in a dory and throw pieces of cod liver in the water. When large quantities of birds have been attracted to the spot more cod liver is thrown out on a hook. This the birds greedily swallow and thus fall easy victims.

Albatross are fished for in the same way off the Cape of Good Hope. A piece of pork is attached to a long line and thrown overboard. The bird will eye it for a long time, gradually and cautiously making toward it. Suddenly he will seize it and hold it in his beak. When he discovers that he is caught he will sit on the water and vigorously flap his wings. However, he will be drawn into the boat and made a captive.

Albatross fishing is good sport, since the bird requires careful handling. So long as he pulls against the line it is easy enough. The moment, however, he swims forward the hook will drop from his beak unless it is skillfully manipulated, and the bird will find himself free.

A CURIOSITY IN BOOKS.

The Famous Chained Library of Wimbourne, Ireland.

Wimbourne, Ireland, is noted for many things, but its famous chained library is perhaps the most notable of its curiosities. The library possesses unique interest as being one of the few remaining relics of mediaeval knowledge among the people. The collection was made accessible to the people in 1686 and numbers some 200 volumes. The scarcity of books and the value of the collection are both indicated in the steps taken for their preservation, and especially against loss of such treasures by theft. By means of chains and rods rare books were securely fastened to the shelves, and these chains it is rather surprising to learn, were not removed until 1857, when the library fittings were repaired. Among the interesting works of the collection is a copy of the first edition of Sir Walter Raleigh's "History of the World," 1614. It has suffered from fire, and tradition says that Matthew Prior was responsible for its condition, the story being that he fell asleep when reading it once upon a time, and the pages were burned by his candle. It has been neatly repaired, and its misfest volume in the library is a fine old copy in vellum of "Regnum Anianarum." It is in manuscript and bears the date 1243.

First Glimmer of a Star.

A little girl, the French critic Sarcey related, once presented herself at the Paris Conservatoire in order to pass the examination for admission. All she knew was the fable of "The Two Pigeons," but she had no sooner recited the opening lines when Auber stopped her, with a gesture.

"Enough," he said. "Come here, my child."

The little girl, who was pale and thin, but whose eyes gleamed with intelligence, approached him with an air of assurance.

"Your name is Sarah?" he said.

"Yes, sir," was the reply.

"You are a Jewess?"

"Yes, sir, by birth, but I have been baptized."

"She has been baptized," said Auber, turning to his colleagues. "She has said her fable of The Two Pigeons' very well. She must be admitted."

Thus Sarah Bernhardt, for it was she, entered the Conservatoire.

Sulphur Under Quicksand.

Most of the sulphur consumed in the United States comes from Louisiana, where are vast deposits at a depth of from 600 to 800 feet. As there is a layer of quicksand a hundred feet thick above the sulphur, it was impossible until lately to get out paying quantities. Now, however, it is secured by driving down two pipes. One pipe carries a jet of steam, which, coming in contact with the solid bed of sulphur, melts it into a liquid. This is then forced to the surface by air pressure through the other pipe.

A New Potato.

Vegetarians will doubtless hail with delight the advent of a new potato, blue of skin and yellow of interior, which is about to be placed upon the market. This potato is known as the Salanum commersoni violet and is the result of scientific cultivation at Reading, England. It has a distinct flavor of its own. Epicures describe it as a combined flavor of turnips and asparagus.

THE KERNAL OF TRUTH

GOD WANTS US TO EXPLORE EARTH AND HEAVEN AND SEA.

"AVOID FOOLISH QUESTIONS"

Hairbreadth Differences in Creeds and Ceremonies of No Consequence In Contradistinction to the Simple Gospel Faith That Makes Men Wise Unto Salvation—Strife Over Minor Differences of No Benefit.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1907, by Frederick Joseph Lawton, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 27.—In this sermon the preacher shows us how greatly it would conduce to the benefit of the world at large and to human happiness here and hereafter if men would cease to strive and quarrel over hairbreadth differences in creed, and ceremonies, and with simple Christian faith unite in fraternal efforts for the common good. The text is Titus, iii, 9, "But avoid foolish questions."

Have, you a fathom line? Then drop it into the sea. Have you a telescope? Then examine its lens and point it upon the stars. Have you a crowbar? Then with it pry open the hermetically sealed doors of the geological chambers and finger the leaves of rock and read the illustrated histories of the species. Have you a microscope? Then with the bacteriologist investigate the corridors of the infinitesimal and feed an aquarium in a drop of water and behold the beauty in the end of a fly's wing. God would like you to have all the wonders of the heavens above us and the wonders of the deep beneath us and the wonders of the land about us if he had not meant us to explore them and to try to make the works of his fingers part of our lives.

You never yet met an intelligent man or woman who was not continually asking questions and striving to understand the unknown. The disposition to investigate and the unwillingness to adopt the solution of the problems of life about us are always the signs of an intellectual soundness. In the spiritual life, as well as in the political and the mechanical and the philosophical world, the one word which should be most often spoken by the human lips is "Why?" We find it nearly always in the child. We then "and "Why that?" and "Why the other thing?" The human mind and soul cannot touch rest. The mind is further broken out or shriveled up. The other part is a pulpy mass. It is by such which we should try to find out the hidden mysteries of the universe.

But there is an intelligent way of pursuing that word "Why?" and a foolish way. There is a way of asking "Why?" which points to the world that you are sincerely desirous to obtain knowledge. Then there is a way of using "Why?" which conveys to the world that you do not wish to learn, but are moved by curiosity only or by a desire to unsettle fundamental truths. A man who was a foreigner, who came to America and began to ask questions than 14 Hung Chang, the celebrated Chinese viceroy, is also generally frivolous and to our mind unworthy. How would ask good modern ladies why they never menstrual and how old they were. He would ask people why they were fat and lean. He would ask this question and that and the other question until he made every one around him uncomfortable. Then some people push that word "Why?" to the point of ridicule. By the Socratic method they try to find out God and Christ and the Bible out of the minds and hearts of their friends. With the interrogation point they would advertise to do away with their transcendental reasoning powers their faculty of comparison and their transcendental curiosity.

Paul in his epistle to young Titus advises a similar course. He says to him curiously when he tells him to avoid foolish questions he is not endeavoring to put a padlock on the intellectual faculties of the human mind, but by telling him not to think and not to read and not to investigate he is only telling him to avoid those questions which are foolish and which are not worthy of consideration. Paul is simply telling Titus not to waste his time in the consideration of those questions which are of no benefit to the human race. He is telling him not to think and not to read and not to investigate

The Best Flour,
Dafoe's Nonesuch,
Dafoe's Manitoba Patent

By numerous tests by the best bakers in the city, blended grades have been proven to be the best flours to use.

When buying flour, ask for Dafoe's, and patronize your home mill, thereby supporting Home and knowing that you are getting flour cheaper than the product of the West, as no handling has to be transported thousands of miles, at great expense and usually, when it reaches you, of inferior quality.

The object of the farmer or the mechanic would be to Toronto or to obtain goods or an article he can get at the home store just as good, but do not hesitate to buy flour from mile hundreds of miles away, and sell you an inferior flour for more money than you can purchase the home product for, every bag of which is guaranteed.

Chopped corn meal and buckwheat flour always on hand. Feed grinding a specialty, with the best feed mills known to the trade.

A full stock of the best Anthracite coal; also in the market for the purchase of all kinds of grain.

Ask for prices at the Big Mill, before purchasing your Flour, Feed or Coal.

WISE AND OTHERWISE.

"Mamma," said little Dorothy, "when I'm a housewife, you ought to take me with you to market."

"Why, my child?" replied mamma, much flattered.

"Then I could show you some of the things you ought to buy," said Dorothy.

Little Bill—Mister, do you like pie? Mr. Hungry—Yes, indeed. Little Bill—Well, I'm a thinkin' I'll sell you a piece.

Mr. Hungry—Why, you little rascal, I'll have you know I'm a minister. Little Bill—Well, I'll let you have it cheap.

"Mamma," asked little Willie, "what is a bachelor?"

"A bachelor, my son," replied mamma, "is a man who has no wife."

"Then," said Willie, "papa is a bachelor, too."

"Why, Willie," said mamma, "what do you mean?"

"Why," said Willie, "papa has no wife, for he's always telling me to keep out of the way when I'm playing with mine."

"Now, Johnny," said the teacher, "you may tell me the difference between a cow and a horse."

"Yes'm," said Johnny. "A cow has horns and a horse hasn't

A RARE CHANCE TO BUY FURS.

The big removal sale of Furs, Hats and Caps, in Kingston's Famous Fur Store, is the talk of the Province. You can order by mail with the positive assurance that everything is exactly as represented. During this sale nothing will be changed, sent on approval or exchanged. LITTLE DOLLIE DIMPLES.

Mr. C. H. Kerr presents his latest musical and dramatic success, "Little Dollie Dimples," with the Broadway favorite, Grace Cameron in the title role, at the Grand Opera House in Kingston, on Saturday, Feb. 2d, matinee and night. This attraction is a large and important one and the supporting company one of the largest and most expensive organizations now touring the United States. Over 60 principals, chorus, ballet and supernumeraries are used in this production. Two carloads of magnificent scenery, electrical effects, properties and paraphernalia are carried, and the production is said to be one of the most elaborately gowned of this season's offerings. The book, which is a departure from the general rule of nonsensical comedies and can more justly be termed a musical drama, for the story is complete and consistent, the situations are dramatic in the extreme, yet the musical part of the performance is of that sweet, tuneful nature that causes the hearers to whistle and to sing the many catchy airs for weeks after the company has left the city.

IN THE TOILS.

Chief Graham is making a good record for himself for promptness in locating an offender of the law. On Monday evening some person broke into Fred Carter's shoe store. The case was reported to the chief on Tuesday morning and at once the officer was in the police station at Kingston. Sunday that is fifty-three hours after the robbery. The prisoner, John Delaney, a man well known in police court circles in Kingston, came to Napanee on Monday in the employ of Mr. Lyons, of Harrowsmith. Delaney imbibed too freely during the first few hours of his visit to Napanee, and was discharged. Some time during the night he entered Mr. Carty's shoe store and took several pairs of overshoes. In departing he left a pair of old boots and a pair of mittens. Chief Graham suspected the man and partly identified him by the mittens. He immediately wired the police department at Kingston and got his man, and brought him here on Wednesday. On being brought before Police Magistrate Rankin the prisoner elected to be tried by his honor without a jury. The evidence being all taken, the magistrate found him guilty and will bring him down for sentence on Thursday next, 7th Feby.

Hockey.

TRENTON 5, NAPANEE 4.

A splendid game of hockey was played at Taylor & Diamond's rink on Friday evening last between Trenton and Napanee, the former winning by the close score of 5-4. The game was fast and clean from start to finish, and the referee, Mr. Finton, was very impartial in his decisions. The local septette should be commended for their good playing considering this was the first game in three years.

NAPANEE 5, DESERONTO 4.

Another good exhibition of hockey was played on the local rink on Tuesday evening, when the local team were successful in defeating the visitors by a score of 5-4. The boys are getting into good shape now and will make it interesting for their opponents during the remainder of the season.

DEATH OF FORMER NAPANEEAN.

Belleville Intelligencer.

After an extended illness, borne with christian fortitude, Mrs. A. W. Vermilyea passed away Thursday, 24th Jany., at the family residence, corner of Catharine and Coleman streets. Deceased, who was 68 years of age, was married a few years ago to Mr. Vermilyea. Previous to her second marriage she resided in Napanee for many years. Mrs. Vermilyea was a true christian lady, esteemed by all who knew her. She was a member of Bridge st. Methodist church. Some months ago she was taken ill with a malady which defied medical skill. A husband and a number of near relatives survive.

Deceased had many friends in Napanee, who will latter remember here as Mrs. Miller, widow of the late W. W. Miller, a Methodist minister, residing on East st., near the G.T.R. freight shed.

DEATH OR LUNACY seemed the only alternative for a well-known and highly respected lady of W. grams, Ont., who had travelled over two continents in a vain search for a cure for nervous debility and dyspepsia. A friend recommended Smith's Americanized Nervura. One bottle helped, a box cured, and her own words were: "It has saved my life."

YEOMANS—BROWN.

A happy house wedding, at which were included about twenty-five immediate relations, was celebrated on Wednesday evening at the bride's residence of Councillor and Mrs. Sexsmith, Deseronto, when Mrs. Sexsmith's youngest sister, Miss Annie Brown, was united in marriage with Mr. Yeomans, a prosperous farmer of Newburgh. The couple were unattended during the service. Rev. A. J. H. Stirke, pastor of the Methodist church, officiated. The bride, who was becomingly attired in a gown of embroidered Persian lawn and carried a cluster of white carnations, was given away by her brother-in-law, Councillor Sexsmith. After congratulations the bridal party repaired to the dining room, where a tempting wedding dinner was served from tables decorated with pink and white carnations and smilax. The health of the bride was proposed by Mr. Sexsmith, and speeches were made by Mr. Yeomans, Councillor Sexsmith and others. The bride received a handsome and costly collection of gifts, many of her many friends remembering her on this most important event. The groom's gift to his bride was a beautiful pearl cross. The happy couple left on the midnight train for a shower of rice and good wishes, for an extended honeymoon, after which they will visit Toronto, Buffalo, New York City, and on their return will visit T. C. Brown, brother of the bride at Middletown, N. Y. The bride's travelling dress was of garnet broadcloth, with hat to match. On their return they will reside at their home in Newburgh.

The Day-light Store

Napanee's Most Progressive Store Why?

Because this store has made more progress in nearly five years than many other have in twenty-five years. We have just closed a phenomenal year's business, and opened the business for 1907, which will be noted for its personality in every detail. Having completed our numerous improvements, we now have a frontage of nearly 100 ft. and over a quarter of an acre of floor space for selling purposes, which is larger in proportion than any Toronto store. New departments have been added and each one stocked to its utmost capacity with the newest goods from domestic makers and the great markets of the "old world," placing us in a position to compete with the metropolitan stores.

"Personality"? "What is it that draws me back to your store no matter where I go?" said a woman the other day. "What is it that after seeing all the great shops of larger cities makes me say, 'yours has a charm above all others?'" asked a returned buyer. PERSONALITY. Personality of the goods, personality of the service of the store. Like people, each store has a distinct personality. Walk through the enlarged women's section on the first floor. Stroll into the new department in the rear. Pass an hour among the exquisite things at the notion department at the right east entrance first floor, pausing a while among the special exhibits at the Silks and Dress Goods section. Note the change in the Drapery and Carpet departments. Many places have been made over during the winter months, but the store personality always remains—and this will always be the charm of this business—its distinct personality—it is Madill's.

FUR SECTION.

Handsome Furs at Very Low Prices.

With so fine a record for high-class Furs as we possess, it would be unfair to you and unfair to ourselves if we were to permit questionable qualities and doubtful styles to enter our Fur Department. We mean to say that whatever you choose in our fur department during February will have the same high quality mark that distinguished our furs throughout the season—meaning further that our sale offerings are not composed of fur made up for the occasion, but the very pick of an excellent regular stock at bargain prices. Our stock is limited. But buying now is a good investment. Get our prices.

Keep in close touch with this space and you will see we are the originators of every important event in up-to-date merchandising.

Our Ready-to-wear Section is showing a splendid assortment of Women's and Misses' Jackets, fine exclusive designs, latest style in length and finish, best of trimmings and very stylish. Prices will be wonderfully low during this month.

DEATH OF A VERY OLD LADY.

We deeply regret to chronicle the death of Isabella Akins, relict of the late Thomas Hinchey, of the Township of Camden, which occurred just at daybreak on Sunday morning last at the home of her youngest daughter, Mrs. Baptist Wilson, near Enterprise. Aunt Hetty, as she was affectionately called by relatives and friends, had lived to a ripe old age, and reached the exceptional limit of ninety-four, and possessed most of her faculties up to the last. She was a native of Ireland. She was born in County Armagh, Ireland, in 1812 when George was crowned and paralyzed with the Napoleonic wars. It was the very year of the fire at Moscow, and the Fatal Retreat of the French army from that burning city. It was also just seven years after Nelson's famous victory at Trafalgar, and three years before the final defeat and overthrow of Napoleon at Waterloo.

Miss Akins' upbringing in the rainy north, and humidity of the village life of the Emerald Isle was in the main responsible for what could have wished. She was a victim of the dreadful Potato Blight of George III., and the reign of terror that followed. She was married to Mr. Hinchey about King William IV. and two years after the birth of Queen Victoria came to Canada with her husband and family, and settled in Hinchey's Mills, now Mary Ann. In 1857, the year of the Indian Mutiny, they moved to Ameliasburg, and on the voyage down the lake their little son was born to them, Wm. Baptist Hinchey, now of Wardsville. Their daughter Mary Ann Tummon, died when just twelve years of age, and her husband, Mr. Tummon, died suddenly in Hinchey Mills, and further bereavement followed in the death of her husband, Mr. Hinchey. Enterprise, Hope the family settled in 1859, during which time of the rapid development of a settler's life in those days, Mrs. Hinchey was a busy woman. In fact, fulfilled Thomas wished to. The latter in particular is afraid of the which he had a great dread.

Mr. Hinchey and her husband were members of the Church of England, belonging to the Parish of Ameliasburg. Enterprise, and there they attended the Parish Church. Mrs. Hinchey in her younger days was a good singer, and enjoyed singing when the services of the Church made his periodic visits, and Aunt Hetty never missed a visit of his and listened to the old, old story of Jesus and His Love from one of the ministers' lips. In fact, her home always was open to the ministers of God, and was for years the headquarters of Rev. Dr. Wright, Rev. Wm. White and Smythe. "Granny" had many of her children baptized by the former, and always supported the Church in the early days. Considering her great generous gifts.

Mrs. Hinchey was "Grandma" to everyone's friend and comforter in times of sickness and distress. In the funeral of the home was crowded by the children, grandchildren and friends of the family, and Rev. Hopper, Rev. Wallbridge, Wilmot, Mary Ann, Rev. Mr. Hinchey, Mrs. Hinchey, Mrs. Hinchey, Mrs. Hinchey, Oakville, Nathaniel Hinchey, Mrs. Wardsville, Mrs. Hinchey, Mrs. Hinchey of Westphalia, Elizabeth Fenton, Mrs. Catherine McGregor, Ameliasburg, Mrs. Stevenson, Morven; Shirley Hinchey, Hope Hinchey, Mrs. Hinchey, Mrs. Hinchey, Enterprise. There are thirty grandchildren, and over sixteen great grandchildren.

Mrs. Hinchey had pre-deceased her husband at the ripe age of 96. But a few years before her departure Mrs. Hinchey celebrated the homestead, and had the pleasure of having her family all around her. Her efforts to make "Granny" as happy as possible in her declining days. Death came quickly at the last, and Aunt Hetty died a good old Christian, and left that remaineth for the people of God just as the Sabbath dawned. She was breaking in the eastern horizon, and the sun was just rising on Tuesday, and notwithstanding the day of rest, the funeral took place on Thursday afternoon, was largely attended. Her old friend, Rev. Mr. Hopper, officiated, and was literally true. Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in in his season.

Now the day of toil is done,
Now the race of life is run,
Father, grant Thy wearied one
Rest for evermore.

Another Adventure of Sherlock Holmes.

CHAPTER I.

Mr. Sherlock Holmes, who was usually very late in the mornings, save upon those not infrequent occasions when he was up all night, was seated at the breakfast table. I stood upon the hearth-rug and picked up the stick which our visitor had left behind him the night before. It was a fine, thick piece of wood, bulbous-headed, of the sort which is known as a "Penang lawyer." Just under the head was a broad silver band, nearly an inch across. "To James Mortimer, M.R.C.S., from his friends of the C.C.H." was engraved upon it, with the date "1884." It was just such a stick as the old-fashioned family practitioner used to carry—dignified, solid, and reassuring.

"Well, Watson, what do you make of it?"

Holmes was sitting with his back to me, and I had given him no sign of my occupation.

"How did you know what I was doing? I believe you have eyes in the back of your head."

"I have, at least, a well-polished silver-plated coffee-pot in front of me," said he. "But, tell me, Watson, what do you make of our visitor's stick? Since we have been so unfortunate as to miss him and have no notion of his errand, this accidental souvenir becomes of importance. Let me hear you reconstruct the man by an examination of it."

"I think," said I, following as far as I could the methods of my companion, "that Dr. Mortimer is a successful elderly medical man, well-esteemed, since those who know him give him this mark of their appreciation."

"Good!" said Holmes. "Excellent!"

"I think also that the probability is in favor of his being a country practitioner who does a great deal of his visiting on foot."

"Why so?"

"Because this stick, though originally a very handsome one, has been so knocked about that I can hardly imagine a town practitioner carrying it. The thick iron ferrule is worn down, so it is evident that he has done a great amount of walking with it."

"Perfectly sound!" said Holmes.

"And then again, there is the 'friends of the C.C.H.' I should guess that to be the Something Hunt, the local hunt to whose members he has possibly given some surgical assistance, and which has made him a small presentation in return."

"Really, Watson, you excel yourself," said Holmes, pushing back his chair and lighting a cigarette. "I am bound to say that in all the accounts which you have been so good as to give of my own small achievements you have habitually underrated your own abilities. It may be that you are not yourself luminous, but you are a conductor of light. Some people without possessing genius have a remarkable power of stimulating it. I confess, my dear fellow, that I am very much in your debt."

Weak Kidneys

Weak Kidneys surely point to weak kidney forces. The Kidneys, like the Heart, and the stomach, fail when weakness, not in the organ itself, but in the nerves that control and guide it, tells them so. Dr. Shoop's Restorative is a medicine specifically prepared to reach these nerves. To doctor the Kidneys alone, is folly. It is a waste of time, and of money as well.

If your back aches or is weak, if the urine is scanty or unnatural-strong, if you have pains in the bladder, either distressing or dangerous-look at the Nerves. Dr. Shoop's Restorative is a nerve remedy of kindred-and see what it can and will do. Druggist recommended and sold.

SPURGEON WITTICISMS.

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, speaking of advice tendered by the Rev. Mr. Spurgeon of Fredericton, N.B., to persons who are in search of ministers and wanted by the Baptist church of that country church offered such a very small salary that no minister could live on by the trustees: "The only individual I know who could exist on such a salary would be the angel Gabriel. He would need no other cash than clothes, and he would come down from heaven every Monday morning and go back at night. So I would advise you to meet him." The same pertinent criticism of another church were so numerous that the Spurgeon recorded the case of a corresponding deacon to take a large envelope to be fulsome, but I confess that I covet your skull."

to say that the presentation was on the occasion of the change."

"It certainly seems probable."

"Now, you will observe that he could not have been on the staff of the hospital, since only a man well-established in a London practice could hold such a position, and such a one would not drift into the country. What was he, then? He was a consultant, and yet not on the staff he could only have been a house-surgeon or a house-physician—little more than a senior student. And he left five years ago—the date is on the stick. So your grave, middle-aged family practitioner vanishes into thin air, my dear Watson, and there emerges a young fellow under thirty, amiable, unambitious, absent-minded, and the possessor of a favorite dog, which I should describe roughly as being larger than a terrier and smaller than a mastiff."

I laughed incredulously as Sherlock Holmes leaned back in his settee and blew little wavering rings of smoke up into the ceiling.

"As to the latter part, I have no means of checking you," said I, "but at first sight it is not difficult to find out a few particulars about the man's age and professional career." From my memories of Bart's I could look down the long list of the alumni of the Medical Directory and trace up the name, following the various steps until, finally, amidst much fluttering, absent-minded, and the possessor of a favorite dog, which I should describe roughly as being larger than a terrier and smaller than a mastiff."

I laughed incredulously as Sherlock Holmes leaned back in his settee and blew little wavering rings of smoke up into the ceiling.

"As to the latter part, I have no means of checking you," said I, "but at first sight it is not difficult to find out a few particulars about the man's age and professional career." From my memories of Bart's I could look down the Medical Directory and turned up the name. There were several Mortimers, but only one who could be our visitor. I read aloud the record.

"Mortimer, James, M.R.C.S., 1882, Grimpen, Dartmoor, Devon. House surgeon, from 1882 to 1884, at Charing Cross Hospital. Winner of the Jackson prize for Comparative Pathology, with essay entitled 'Is Disease a Reversion?' Corresponding member of the Swedish Pathological Society. Author of 'Some Facts of Atavism' (Lancet, 1882). 'Sidelights on Heredity' (Practitioner, March, 1883). Medical Officer for the parishes of Grimpen, Thorsley, and High Barrow."

"No mention of that local hunt, Watson," said Sherlock Holmes, with a mischievous smile, "but a country doctor, as you very astutely observed. I think that I am fairly justified in my inferences. As to the adjectives, I said, if I remember right, amiable, unambitious and absent-minded. It is my experience that it is only an amiable man in this world who receives testimonials, only an unambitious one who abandons a London career for the country, and only an absent-minded one who leaves his stick and not his visiting-card after waiting an hour in your room."

"And the dog?"

"Has been in the habit of carrying this stick behind his master. Being a heavy stick the dog has held it tightly by the middle, and the marks of his teeth are very plainly visible. The dog's jaws, as shown in the space between these marks, is too broad in my opinion for a terrier and not broad enough for a mastiff. It may have been—yes, by Jove, it is a curly-haired spaniel."

He had risen and paced the room as he spoke. Now he halted in the recess of the window. There was such a ring of conviction in his voice that I glanced up in surprise.

"My dear fellow, how can you possibly be so sure of that?"

"For the very simple reason that I see the dog himself on our door-step, and can recognize the breed before I open the door. Don't move, I beg you, Watson. He is a professional brother of yours, and when you meet him you will appreciate any assistance in my methods. Now is the dramatic moment of fate, Watson, when you hear a step upon the stair which is walking into your life, and you know not whether for good or ill. What does Dr. James Mortimer, the man of science, ask of Sherlock Holmes, the specialist in crime? Come in!"

The appearance of our visitor was a surprise to me, since I had expected a typical country practitioner. He was a very tall, thin man, with a long nose like a beak, which jutted out between two keen, grey eyes, set closely together and surmounted by high, domed forehead of gold-rimmed glasses. He was clad in a professional but rather slovenly fashion, for his frock-coat was dingy and his trousers frayed. Though young, his long back was already bowed, and he walked with a forward thrust of his head and a general air of peering benevolence. As he entered his eyes fell upon the stick in Holmes's hand, and he ran towards it with an exclamation of joy. "I am so very glad," said he. "I was not sure whether I had left it before at the Shipton Arms or whether I had not lost that stick for the second time."

"A presentation, I see," said Holmes.

"Yes, sir."

"From Charing Cross Hospital?"

"From one or two friends there on the occasion of my marriage."

"Dear, dear, that's bad!" said Holmes, shaking his head.

Dr. Mortimer looked through his glasses in mild astonishment.

"Why is it bad?"

"Only that you have disarranged our little deductions. Your marriage, you mean?"

"Yes, sir. I married, and so left the hospital, and with it all hopes of a consulting practice. It was necessary to make a home."

"Come, come, we are not so far wrong, after all," said Holmes. "And now, Dr. James Mortimer—"

"Mister, sir. Mister—a humble M.R.C.S."

"And a man of precise mind, evidently."

"A widower in science, Mr. Holmes, a picker up of shells on the shores of the great unknown ocean. I presume that is Mr. Sherlock Holmes who I am addressing and not—"

"No, this is my friend Dr. Watson."

"Glad to meet you, sir. I have heard your name mentioned in connection with that of your colleague. I am much the very much, Mr. Holmes. I had hardly expected so dolichocephalic a skull or such well-developed supraorbital development. Would you have any objection to my running my finger along your parietal fissure? A cast of your skull, sir, until the original is available, would be an ornament to any anthropological museum. It is not my intention to be fulsome, but I confess that I covet your skull."

Sherlock Holmes waved our strange visitor into a chair. "You are an enthusiast in your line of thought, I perceive, sir, as I am in mine," said he. "I observe from your forefinger that you smoke your own cigarettes. Have no hesitation in doing so."

The man drew out paper and tobacco and twirled the one up in the other with surprising dexterity. He had long, univorine fingers as agile and restless as the antennae of an insect. Holmes was silent, but his little dancing glances showed me the interest which he took in our curious companion.

"I presume, sir," said he at last, "that it was not merely for the purpose of examining my skull that you have done me the honor to call here last night and again to-day?"

"No, sir; no; though I am happy to have had the opportunity of doing that as well. I came to you, Mr. Holmes, because I recognized that I am myself an unpractical man, and because I am suddenly confronted with a most serious and extraordinary problem. Recognizing, as I do, that you are the second highest expert in Europe—"

"Indeed, sir! May I inquire who has the honor to be the first?" asked Holmes, with some asperity.

"To the man of precisely scientific mind the work of Monsieur Bertillon must always appeal strongly."

"Then had you not better consult him?"

"I said, sir, to the precisely scientific mind. But as a practical man of affairs it is acknowledged that you stand alone. I trust, sir, that I have not inadvertently—"

"Just a little," said Holmes. "I think, Dr. Mortimer, you would do wisely if without more ado you would kindly tell me plainly what the exact nature of the problem is in which you demand my assistance."

There ran behind him such a hound of hell.

CHAPTER II.

"I have in my pocket a manuscript," said Dr. James Mortimer.

"I observed it as you entered the room," said Holmes.

"It is an old manuscript."

"Early eighteenth century, unless it is a forgery."

"How can you say that, sir?"

"You have presented an inch or two of it to my examination all the time that you have been talking. It would be a poor expert who could not give the date of a document within a decade or so. You may possibly have read my little monograph upon the subject. I put that at 1730."

"The exact date is 1742." Dr. Mortimer drew it from his breast-pocket. "This family papers was committed to my care by Sir Charles Baskerville, whose sudden and tragic death some three months ago created so much excitement in London. I may say that I was his personal friend as well as medical attendant. He was a strong-minded man, sir, shrewd, practical, and as unimaginative as I am myself. Yet he took this document very seriously, and his mind was prepared for just such an end as did eventually overtake him."

Holmes stretched out his hand for the manuscript and flattened it upon his knee.

"You will observe, Watson, the alternative use of the long 's' and the short. It is one of several indications which enabled me to fix the date."

I looked over his shoulder at the yellow sheet with the faded script. At the head was written: "Baskerville Hall," and below, in large, scrawling figures: "1742."

"It appears to be a statement of some sort."

"Yes, it is a statement of a certain legend which runs in the Baskerville family."

"But I understand that it is something more than a family legend upon which you wish to consult me?"

"Most modern. A most practical, pressing matter, which must be decided within twenty-four hours. But the manuscript is short and is intimately connected with the affair. With your permission I will read it to you."

Holmes settled back in his chair, placed his finger-tips together, and closed his eyes, with an air of resignation. Dr. Mortimer turned the manuscript to the light and read in a high, cracking voice the following old-world narrative:—

"Of the origin of the Hound of the Baskervilles there have been many statements, yet as I come in a direct line from Hugo Baskerville, and as I had the story from my father, who also had it from his, I have set it down with all belief that my children will in turn read it as is here set forth. And I would have you believe, my sons, that the same Justice which punishes sin may also most graciously forgive it, and that no man, be so heavy but that by prayer and repentance it may be removed. Learn then from my words not to fear the fruits of the past, but rather to be circumspect in the future, that those foul passions whereby our family have suffered so grievously may not again be loosed to our undoing.

"Know then that in the time of the Great Rebellion (the history of which by the learned Lord Clarendon I most earnestly commend to your attention) this Manor of Baskerville was held by Hugo of that name, nor can it be gainsaid that he was a most wild, profane, and godless man. This, indeed, his neighbors might have pardoned, seeing that saints have never flourished in those parts, but there was in him a certain wanton and cruel humor which made him a byword through the West. It chanced that this Hugo came to love (if, indeed, so dark a passion may be known under so bright a name) the daughter of a yeoman who held lands near to the Manor of Baskerville estate. But the young maiden, being discreet and of good repute, would never avoid him, for she feared his evil name. So it came to pass that one Michaelmas this Hugo, with five or six of his idle and wicked companions, stole down upon the farm and carried off the maiden, her father and brothers being from home, as he well knew. When they had brought her to the hall the maiden was placed in an upper chamber, while Hugo and his friends sat down to a long carouse, as was their nightly custom. Now, the poor lass upstairs was like to have her wits turned at the singing and shouting and terrible oaths which came up to her from below, for they say that the words used by Hugo Baskerville, when he was in wine, were such as might blast the man who said them. At last in the stress of her fear she did that which might have daunted the bravest or most active man, for by the aid of the growth of ivy which covered (and still covers) the south wall she came down from under the eaves, and so homeward across the moor, a journey of three leagues betwixt the Hall and her father's farm.

"It chanced that some little time later Hugo left his guests to carry food and drink—with other worse things, doubtless—to his captive, and so found the cage empty and the bird escaped. Then, as it would seem, he became as one that hath a devil, for rushing down the stairs into the dining-hall, he sprang upon the great table, flagons and trenchers flying before him, and he cried aloud before all the company that he would that very night render his body and soul to the Powers of Hell if he might but overtake the wench. And while the revellers stood aghast at the fury of the man, one more wicked or, it may be, more drunken than the rest, cried out that they should put the hounds upon her. Whereat Hugo ran from the house, crying to his grooms that they should saddle his mare and unleash the pack, and giving the hounds a sniff of the scent of which they loved best in the line, and so off full cry in the moonlight over the moor.

"Now, for some space the revellers stood aghast, unable to understand all that had been done in such haste. But anon their bemused wits awoke to the nature of the deed which was then to be done upon the moorland. Every thing was low in an uproar, some calling for their pistols, some for their horses, and some for another flask of wine. But at length some sense came back to their crapulous minds, and the whole of them, thirteen in number, took horse and started in pursuit. The moon shone clear above them, and they rode swiftly abroast, taking that course which the maid must needs have taken if she were to reach her own home.

"They had gone a mile or two when they passed one of the night shepherds upon the moorlands, a man by name to know if he had seen the hunt. And the man, as the story goes, was so crazed with fear that he could scarce speak, but at last he said that he had indeed seen the unhappy maiden, with the hounds upon her track. But I have seen more than that," said he, "for Hugo Baskerville passed me upon his black mare, and there ran behind him such a hound of hell as God forbid should ever be at my heels." So the drunken squires cursed the shepherd and rode on, but none the less soon their gains turned cold, for there came a galloping across the moor, and the black mare, dabbled with white froth, was making headlong for them, and empty saddle. Then the revellers rode close together, for a great fear was on them, but they still followed over the moor, though each, had he been alone, would have been right glad to have turned his horse's head. Riding slowly in this fashion they came at last upon the hounds. These, though known for their valor and their breed, were whimpering in a cluster at the head of a deep dip or goyal, as we call it, upon the moor, some slinking away with their tails between their legs, others standing open-mouthed, staring down into the narrow valley before them.

"The company had come to a halt, more sober men, as you may guess, than when they started. The most of them would by no means advance, but three of them, the boldest, or it may be the most drunken, rode forward down the goyal. Now, it opened into a broad space in which stood two of those great stones, still to be seen there, which were set by certain forgotten peoples in the days of old. The moon was shining bright upon the clearing, and there in the centre of the unhappy maid whom she had fallen, dead of fear and of exhaustion. It was not the sight of her body, nor yet was it that of the body of Hugo Baskerville lying near her, which raised the hair upon the heads of these three daredevil roysterers, but it was that standing over Hugo, and plucking at his throat, there stood a foul thing, a great, black beast, shaped like a hound, yet larger than any hound that ever mortal eye has rested upon. And even as they looked the thing tore the throat out of Hugo Baskerville, on which, as it appeared to their terrified eyes, it turned its head and fastened upon the throat of his companion, and dripping jaws upon them, the three shrieked with fear and rode for old-world narrative:—

dear life, still screaming, across the moor. One, it is said, died that very night of what he had seen, and the other twain were but broken men for the rest of their days.

"Such is the tale, my sons, of the coming of the hound which is said to have plagued the family so sorely ever since. If I have set it down it is because that which is clearly known hath less terror than that which is but hinted at and guessed. Nor can it be denied that many of the family have been unhappy in their deaths, which have been sudden, bloody, and mysterious. Yet may we shelter ourselves in the infinite goodness of Providence, which would not forever punish the innocent beyond the third or fourth generation, which is threatened in Holy Writ. To that merciful Power, my sons, I would commend you, and I counsel you by way of caution to forbear from crossing the moor in those dark hours when the powers of evil are exalted.

"(This from Hugo Baskerville to his sons Rodger and John, with instructions that they say nothing thereof to their sister Elizabeth.)"

When Dr. Mortimer had finished reading this sinister narrative he pushed his spectacles up on his forehead and stared across at Mr. Sherlock Holmes. The latter yawned and tossed the end of his cigarette into the fire.

"Well?" said he.

"Do you not find it interesting?"

"To a collector of fairy tales."

Dr. Mortimer drew a folded newspaper out of his pocket.

"Now, Mr. Holmes, we will give you something a little more recent. This is the Devon County Chronicle of June 14th of this year. It is a short account of the sudden death at the moment of Sir Charles Baskerville which occurred a few days before that date."

My friend leaned a little forward and his expression became intent. Our visitor readjusted his glasses and began:

"The recent sudden death of Sir Charles Baskerville, whose name has been mentioned as the probable Liberal candidate for Mid-Devon at the next election, has cast a gloom over the county. Though Sir Charles had resided in Baskerville Hall for a comparatively short period his amiability of character and generous disposition had won the affection and respect of all who had been brought into contact with him. In these days of extraordinary riches it is refreshing to find a case where the scion of an old county family which has fallen upon evil days is able to make his own fortune and to bear it worthily. Sir Charles, as is well known, made large sums of money in South African speculation. More wise than those who go on until the wheel turns against them, he realized his gains and returned to England a rich man. It is only two years since he took up his residence at Baskerville Hall, and it is common talk how large sums of money he spent upon the house and grounds. Being himself childless, it was his openly expressed desire that the whole countryside should profit in his own lifetime, profit by his good fortune, and many will have personal reasons for bewailing his untimely end. His generous donations to local and county charities have been frequently chronicled in these columns.

"The circumstances connected with the death of Sir Charles cannot be said to have been entirely cleared up by the present inquest, but at least enough has been done to dispose of those rumors to which local superstition has given rise. There is no reason whatever to suspect foul play, or to imagine that death could be from any but natural causes. Sir Charles was a widower, and a man who was known to have been in some ways of an eccentric habit of mind. In spite of his considerable wealth he was simple in his personal tastes, and his indoor servants at Baskerville Hall consisted of a married couple named Barrymore, the husband acting as butler and the wife as housekeeper. Their evidence, corroborated by that of several friends, tends to show that Sir Charles's health has for some time been impaired, and points especially to some affection of the heart, manifesting itself in changes of color, breathlessness, and acute attacks of nervous depression. Dr. James Mortimer, the friend and medical attendant of the deceased, has given evidence to the same effect.

"The facts of the case are simple. Sir Charles Baskerville was in the habit every night before going to bed of walking down the famous Yew Alley of Baskerville Hall. The evidence of the Barrymores shows that this had been his custom. On the night of July Sir Charles had declared his intention of starting next day for London, and had ordered that breakfast should be early and that his luggage should be packed. Having told the servants that he would not need their services any more that night, he smoked several cigars and went out for his nocturnal walk, in the course of which he was in the habit of smoking a cigar. He never returned. It twelve o'clock Barrymore, finding the hall door still open, became alarmed, and, lighting a lantern, went in search of his master. The day had been wet, and Sir Charles's footmarks were clearly visible to the eye as he passed from the house. At the moment when he reached the moor-gate there was no doubt that he had been standing for some time. His cigar-ash had fallen from him, and he had obviously remained motionless. From the moor-gate a path leads down through two lines of old yew trees to the house. There was no trace upon the path itself that Sir Charles had proceeded any farther, but on the soft gravel which lies between the hedge and the path the footmarks of a gentleman in boots were clearly visible. Dr. Mortimer, following the path in the direction of the house, found the body lying motionless at the end of the Yew Alley. Save the change in the shape of the prints after that point, I noted that there was no other track, and that those of Barrymore on the soft gravel path were entirely obliterated by those of the deceased. The man had evidently run down the path, for his toes were much deeper in the earth than his heels. Nothing had been touched, save that the wicket-gate which opens from the moor had been forced open by the hand, and that the woodwork had been splintered to a height of four feet from the ground, and the fastenings smashed. There were no signs of violence upon the body, and though the doctor reports that the expression upon the face is singularly terrible, this is explained as being a post-mortem distortion which is frequently observed in cases where death is due to asphyxia. Dr. Mortimer's evidence points to a severe attack of spasmodic angina as the cause of death. This medical testimony was corroborated by that of the other two gentlemen who had been in attendance upon the deceased.

"The only other witness of the occurrence who has come forward is Mrs. Laura Lyons, whose letter to Sir Charles upon the subject of business has been found in his pocket. She has been unable to throw any light upon the matter, save that she was a friend of Sir Charles, and had been in the habit of corresponding with him upon money matters. Sir Charles's affairs are found to be considerably involved, and it is probable that the amount of ready money at his bankers will be found to be very much below the general expectation. Should the forthcoming investigation reveal any unexpected developments we shall of course lay them before our readers. In the meantime the vacancy thus created in the representation of the county will undoubtedly be keenly contested, unless Mr. Sherlock Holmes, the famous consulting detective, should take the matter up, in which case there would be little doubt as to the result."

Dr. Mortimer folded up his paper and put it back into his pocket. "Those are the public facts, Mr. Holmes, in connection with the death of Sir Charles Baskerville."

"I must thank you," said Sherlock Holmes, for calling my attention to a case which certainly presents some features of interest. I had observed some newspaper comment at the time, but I was exceedingly preoccupied by the affair of the Vatican cameos, and in my anxiety to oblige the Pope I lost touch with several interesting English cases. TAMWORTH.

A pleasing concert was given by the Tamworth Glee Club in the town hall on Friday evening last. A large audience was present. The programme which was given entirely by the Glee Club was the best heard here in some time, and it must have taken considerable time and pat ence before Mesdames Fuller and Wellwood train the participants to the degree of perfection shown. The numbers were all carefully selected and in many cases enthusiastically encored. The selection given by the odd 14, "Why we never married," was a laughable farce in itself, and also the male solo, and the duet, by the Glee Club were each in turn encored. The programme which consisted of thirty numbers, was given in two parts, with a short intermission, and consisted of solos, duets, recitations, drills and dialogues. Messrs. Fuller, Richardson and Shields in the trio were well received. The whole programme was gone through without a break, and those present thoroughly appreciated the efforts of Mesdames Fullerand Wells who, as instructors, deserve great credit for getting up so successful an entertainment. W. J. Paul, M.P.P., occupied the chair and filled his duties in a humorous and pleasing manner.

REPORTING THE CURTAIN LECTURE.

The wife sitting up for her husband, thought that somebody had accompanied him home, and said: "Has the stranger gone? I didn't hear him."

"Oh, he, dear, he hasn't gone," the husband replied, "I have locked him in the room to let him out in three or four hours."

The wife looked amazed and stupefied.

"What—why—who on earth is he, sir?" she stammered.

"My dear," said the husband quietly, "he is a shorthand reporter. I've got literally always forget what you say to me, and for a decrease from 11 to 10 I've got one I go to sleep while you're talking. Now I'll have to sit up and write it out, but to-night and study it at my leisure. I'm going to, my dear," he said tenderly, the door is open, so that he can hear you, and if you stay up as soon as you like."

AVOID HEART STRAIN.

Let every one in sedentary occupations—notes—not fast, providing the liver are not exposed to harmful conditions such as dust, dirt and dull tones. Get exercise and the liver is in order. It has often been remarked as a result of natural law, that it is the most natural thing in the world.

Our modern attitude to the unnatural thing. Men like Lord Balfour of Burleigh, Chamberlain have soared of their intellectualism to active sport, though they have always enjoyed taken enough exercise in golf and the games. Gladstone would stop trees, but would not run a mile. They never strained the intellect, nor enlarged their hearts by wasting their nerve force, nor tearing down as to be easy victims of bacterial invaders.

Here is the golden brain. To ensure this one cannot have labor in the raw exercise—like animals do not work for exercise. Manage your duties like easily and you have no strain. Do not worry. Normal sports for boys and girls should never require a heart strain.—American Medicine.

DESTINY OF MANKIND

RULES IN MYSTERIOUS WAYS

Nowhere Is It More Incumbent Upon Men to Walk Warily Than When Some Sudden Great Temporal Success Comes to Them—Dangers In Success Only Averted By Reliance Upon God's Guidance.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1907, by Frederick Inver, Toronto, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Feb. 3.—In this sermon on the sudden rise of Jehu to power the preacher shows us that God sometimes uses strange instruments to accomplish his purposes and that unspeakable temporal success is often the cause of a man's destruction. The text is found in 2 Kings, 9: "For he driveth furiously."

The world always makes way for its aristocracy, men, whose hearts are pumping arterial blood filled with red corpuscles. Robert Hall, Richard Baxter, Douglas Jerrold, Edward Payson, Robert McCheyne, John Knox and Hannah More Hall Stephens as valetudinarians may have won immortal fame, but they started the battle of life with an awful handicap. The world puts its trust in its hospitals. But only in and for the night hours, standing by the chariots of war and waiting for the battle, the soldier of the battery heroes. The quarter the fat, the breather, the lunger, the deserter revolve and the more flushing the eye of the knight, the more inclined are his subjects to kneel down and worship him. When the lion tamer enters the cage of the wild beasts, the eye must never quiver nor his hand which holds the lash tremble even for an instant or the powerful beasts will be leaping at his throat. The world has but little use for such things. It admires chiefly the man who can lead all his contemporaries in the athletic arena and climbs the hardest hills in the battlefield and who is ready to face every emergency and conquer or die.

Such a man was the hero of my text. What he attempted to do he did with his whole body, mind and soul. Jehu's spirit was like a floodgate. When he attempted to do a thing and opened his floodgate and let all the waters of his energies rush forth in their terrific onrush. His hand which he played he played with his whole heart. When he worked he worked in the same way.

This life of Jehu reminds me a great deal in its intensity of the great English diplomat, Sir Charles Kwan-Smith, whose name is now recognized as his queen at the capital of Fez, in the empire of Morocco. While there a great Moslem uprising against the Christians took place, a movement like the Boxer uprising in China was about to be enacted upon the African shore. The Sultan instantly sent his messengers to the English embassy, saying: "Come quickly! Come by day and by night! Do not rest you! Then in the morning I will send my troops to escort you and your family to the coast." Sir Charles calmly replied: "I do not intend to leave here, neither do I intend to cause to your palace for protection. Tis true I may be killed, and my wife and children may be killed, but you go back and tell your Sultan that if I am killed within one month there will be another British minister in the capital of Fez, and he will be accompanied by a British army." And when that British army comes there will be no Moorish Sultan in Fez! The Sultan realized he was dealing with a giant. At the royal command of the Mohammedan spiritual against the Christians in Morocco instantly ceased. What Sir Charles Kwan-Smith did in Morocco, Jehu, the mighty soldier, did in Samaria. When God selected him as king to succeed the infamous Joram, who was the son of the infamous Ahab, he immediately entered his chariot. He gathered his army. He swept on to battle. He planned his campaign with the disposition before him as to the wisdom, cunning and daring of the strategists of the east.

And Jehu was a man of intense energy. Not only was he energetic in thinking, he was like an exploding cartridge himself as he entered the chariot which it had stored behind the ball. Thus today the figures of my text, Jehu and his chariot, stand to me as emblems of intense energy. In future time the chariot will be used as a symbol of the rushes on the autobahn in the motor tour recently against the unregulated speed of the motor car. The anxious king holds his watch in his hand and says: "The driving of the driver of Jehu reminds me of furiously." So the king assaulted his army and the chariot of Jehu and Jehu was slain near to the city wall of Naboth, which he had stolen by committing at the murder of its late owner. Such is the story of the career of Jehu, the driver from whose life we are going to learn the Memorial lessons of this Lord's day.

This photographical sketch in the first place, teaches us that sometimes success is very bad man to work out his purposes. He sometimes says to Jehus: "Yes, O selfish and sinful man, are to be the instrument by which I will execute my warnings. You are to carry my chalices even though your hands are sinful. You are to disenthe my avenging sword even though your heart is not. You are to run my errands even though you are answering the calls of greed and crime. Thus all doers of good are not necessarily disciples or God's children. Thus we to-day find Jehu toppling over the throne of an infamous king, yet Jehu himself was just as heartless, as merciless and as much of a criminal as Ahab or Jezebel, by whose hands he killed. Thus they might annex his vineyards to the royal domain.

The sinful life of Jehu as a fulfiller of Elijah's prophecies finds its duplicate in that of many evil men, whom God at times has used for certain purposes. Study, for instance, the life of Thomas Paine. Most of the present generation never think of Thomas Paine except as a blasphemer and an enemy of God. Any mention of his name there rises before us his book, "The Age of Reason," which has done more to destroy faith than any book ever penned by man, it not more. Yet, set forth in the "Age of Reason" is, in mission of spiritual and moral and physical destruction. That book brought down a torrent of odium upon Thomas Paine. We hardly ever think of him except as the infidel, the blasphemer and the enemy of society. But amid your generations of evil books do you recall the fact that Paine the infidel was also Paine, one of the great leaders and most powerful factors in the struggle for American liberty? In the darkest days which preceded the preparations of the Declaration of Independence his pen was busy. He published a book at that time called "Common Sense." It was a plea for national independence. It was written in simple language and was read everywhere. Dare any man, facing the historical facts, declare that God did not forge out of the blasphemous pen of a scoffing infidel a golden wand to guide the American people into Independence hall of old Philadelphia?

Study the life of Benedict Arnold. Benedict Arnold did not attempt to betray West Point until 1779, or until the Revolutionary war was half over. Through all the preliminary struggle and during the three years of carnage his was a name to conjure by. Every man was a patriot, no man truer, to the American flag than he. We find the same apparent incongruity in the character of Catherine the Great of Russia, whom history regards as one of the greatest and wisest rulers Russia ever had, although her own heart was a selfish heart of stone and her evil domestic life the symbol of all that is base and impure.

Study the life of Napoleon Bonaparte. Who will say that even his cruel, selfish life was not used by God to accomplish ultimate good? Mme. de Stael denounced his inhumanities in these words: "Far from gaining sauranas in meeting Bonaparte offener, he intimidated me daily more and more. I confessedly felt that no emotion of the heart could possibly take effect upon him. He looks upon a human being as a fact or as a thing, but not as a fellow creature. He does not hate any more than he loves. There is nothing for him but himself. All other beings are so many ciphers. The force of his will lies in the impertinent calculation of his own selfishness." And yet this man, this man characterized by the far-sighted Frenchwoman, this selfish, monster, this human Frankenstein, who conquered and ravaged millions of human with no more compunction than a cook would break a few eggs to make an omelette for breakfast, was the man who stopped the horrors of the French revolution and demolished the Bastilleths with one stroke of his sword. Dare we state that God does not at times use even the sins of his Jehus for a good purpose?

In your life and mine we may be doing good when we think we are helping some men. We may be kind to some people. But a good deed here and there does not make us children of God. Jehu was able to avenge the death of Naboth. In the rumbling of his chariot wheels can you see the tall, gaunt form of Elijah the Tishbite bending over a bleeding corpse and pointing his tremendously long finger at the cringing and cowering king and queen while he says, "Thus saith the Lord, In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth shall dogs lick thy blood—even thine." And of Jezebel also spake the Lord, saying, "The dogs shall eat Jesebel by the wall of Jezreel." But Jehu's chariot was commissioned to fulfill Elijah's prophecy that did not make Jehu a child of God. He did not deceive yourselves. Not all God's instruments are his children. Wicked men, to serve their own interests, may do things which fulfill God's purposes. Jehu was a wicked man and by using them his children. Let no man think that he is necessarily a child of God because he has done things which Jehu executed vengeance on Ahab. But he was a murderer.

We can find helpful lessons from a bad man's life as well as from the life of a good man. Thus to-day, as we see the revolving wheels of Jehu's chariot rushing on toward Jezreel, we learn that when success comes to a great, strong life it generally comes suddenly. It is not a gradual coming. It is a sudden change. The wine fame, as a rule, suddenly. A man goes to work as a youth. He works and labors year by year, day out, for the most part in comparative obscurity. Then, after he has gathered all the material and laid the foundations for the temple of fame, it seems as though that temple comes together and takes form in the twinkling of an eye. Opportunity knocks and lo! the door springs open. "Here I am here! Follow me at once!" The man leaps from his couch and follows Opportunity, and, lo, in an hour his success is won! Such was the meteoric career of our Jehu.

But as hunt up this Jehu a few days before he steps into his chariot to ride to the royal palaces in Jezreel. He was at Ramoth-gilead fighting the Syrians. Ramoth-gilead was a frontier town, sometimes belonging to Israel and sometimes belonging to Syria. At this time it belonged to Israel, but the King of Syria was trying to regain it. Joram, king of Israel, had been fighting and had been wounded, so he retired to Jezreel till his wounds healed, leaving Jehu and other officers in charge. When we enter the officers' quarters we see a council of war. Here are the generals or chief officers in earnest conversation. In the midst of them is a strong, powerful face with set jaws and a physique of iron. "Who is that man?" I ask one of the soldiers. "That is Captain Jehu." "Why, I never hard of him before. Who is he? What great battle has he fought and won? Is he a Goliath or a David?" "Well," says the soldier by my side, "he might be if he had the chance, but he never held anything but a subordinate position. He has been doing harrack duty for a long time. He is one of those men whose names are not known by the world outside of their own company." Just then some one knocks at the door. Then this powerful soldier exclaims, "Come in." In walks a young prophet, "Is Captain Jehu here?" he asks. "I would like to see him alone a moment." No sooner are the twain alone than the prophet lifts his hand and begins to pour the anointing oil upon the soldier's head as he says: "Captain Jehu, thus saith the Lord God of Israel. I have anointed thee King over the people of the Lord, even over Israel." In an instant authority was given him. Thus it is with most strong men. They must labor patiently for years. They must do harrack duty in Ramoth-gilead. They must pave their way for success by the hardest, the bitterest duty. But amid your generations of evil books do you recall the fact that Paine the infidel was also Paine, one of the great leaders and most powerful factors in the struggle for American liberty? In the darkest days which preceded the preparations of the Declaration of Independence his pen was busy. He published a book at that time called "Common Sense." DEADLY LA GRIPPE.

CANADA AGAIN BEING RAVISHED BY AN EPIDEMIC OF THIS DISEASE.

Winter after winter Canada is swept from ocean to ocean by an epidemic of grippe, or influenza as it is sometimes called by those who know no one climate. It strikes first in the extreme north, then in the centre, finally in the extreme south. It lays the strong man prostrate with high fever and chills; headaches and backaches, and pains in every joint. Then it goes to pneumonia, bronchitis, consumption and the deadly grave. You can avoid la grippe by fortifying your system with Nerviline. Put a few drops of Nerviline in a little hot water after going out in the cold, damp weather. These pills protect you from the deadly germs that are floating around and will after effects. If you have a cough, Nerviline is the best remedy. They cure all bronchial troubles—they cure the worst cases of bronchitis—they cure the most severe coughs. Nerviline will cure your neighbors, no matter what ails them. Nerviline is sold by Dr. Wilson, Parker Link, Dr. Spencer, Napanee, and by druggists everywhere. Ask your neighbors about Nerviline. Ask them what they think of it. If you are sick or ailing, you can't ask your neighbors too much. Wanda Cain hardly expected to live. Baby Pills saved her life. Baby Pills save not only fully restored my baby's health, but I gained in taking them. I recommend them to every mother." Baby Pills cure all baby troubles. Mrs. Wm. Williams, Brockville, Ont.

FEBRUARY CANADIAN MAGAZINE.

The February number of The Canadian Magazine contains an interesting article by Prof. Goldwin Smith entitled "The Stage of Former Days." Prof. Smith gives an appreciation of players who have gone since gone from the stage, and he abhorrents the endowment of theatres as powerful organs of education. The article is accompanied by ten reproductions of old engravings and is altogether a valuable contribution to current literature. The summaries also eleven other articles, nine of which are illustrated. There are five short stories, one of which is by Mr. A. E. Carman.

DOCTORING WILD ANIMALS

No achievement of modern medicine is more wonderful, possibly, than the doctoring of wild animals. The daring, skill, and ingenuity which enter into it give it peculiar fascination; while its value as a practical proposition has come to be more and more widely recognized. In the February McClure's, A. W. Rohler has described some remarkable achievements in this field. His stories of typical cases; of "Ralph," the orang-utan, whose death was as touching as that of a child; of "Goldie," the wicked-tempered tiger, whose operation cost his keepers infinite trouble and ingenuity; of "Oom Paul," the little elephant who received the Lorenz treatment; and of many others, have a vividly novel and exciting interest, and open up new fields to the imagination of the reader.

CAR BURNED.

Wednesday, Chas. Fish, brakeman on Bay of Quinte Railway's freight train, stayed over night at the hotel at Sydenham, was burned completely out, and all his clothing. There was a coal stove burning in the car, and the flame snapped from the ignited fuel to a spark. When the fire was first seen the car was all ablaze. For a while the station and storehouse were in danger, but after several times, but the exertions of Sydney Hicks, Mr. Churchen and a few others saved them. The started car contained several hundred tons of grain for the Sydenham High School, and a barrel and several tins of oil. The conductor lost two good fur caps and a valuable coat. A large trunk, full of valuables, belonging to W. Mc. Vaughan's brother, was also burned.

THE EXCLUSION OF LIFE.

The energies of the greatest scientists have been brought to bear upon the discovery of some means or substance by which the degenerating process in the human body will be arrested. Thus far their energies have been to a large extent a failure. Great progress has been made, however, in the treatment of the human eye. Impaired vision is scientifically corrected at The Medical Hall, and satisfaction guaranteed. Eyes tested free. Fred. L. Hooper.

EASTERN METHODIST CHURCH.

Rev. Geo. W. McCoig, B.A., B.D., of Wellington, was to preach next Sacrament, 10th inst., both morning and evening, sermons on behalf of the ministers of the Educational Society of the Methodist church. Dowdell, M.A., in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends of the contracting parties. The bride was given away by her uncle, Mr. H. Symmington, and was gowned in her travelling dress of blue grey cloth, with hat to match. Immediately after the ceremony, the happy couple left for Toronto, Hamilton, and Rochester, and will make home after Feby. 20th at Lake Ridge, Selby.

HORRIBLE ACCIDENT.

THREE MEN BLOWN TO PIECES.

A terrible accident occurred on the farm of Mr. Metcalfe Carscallen, Forest Mills, Thursday morning, by which three men were sent into eternity without a moment's warning.

Mr. Wilbert Bush, who runs a traction engine for his father, Mr. John J. Bush, with two helpers, Stanley Raymond and Charles Boyd, was engaged sawing wood for Mr. Carscallen. The machine had been in operation for a short time when, without a moment's warning, the explosion occurred. The three men, Raymond and Boyd, were killed instantly, the boiler, after being thrown a considerable distance and their bodies terribly mangled, and almost unrecognizable. Raymond was evidently struck in the stomach by the flying missiles, but his death was instantaneous. Messrs. M. Carscallen and Henry Seller and his two sons were assisting the others, but miraculously escaped.

What went wrong with the engine will probably never be known. It rested on two sleighs, and all that was left of it on the sleighs was the fire pan, the level being scattered in every direction. The boiler, weighing about a ton, was blown a distance of over 250 feet away, and nearly wheel, weighing about one thousand pounds, nearly 100 feet, passing through two wire fences and breaking off the posts.

A description of the mangled remains of Bush and Boyd is too horrible to describe. Those present tenderly gathered their scattered remains and conveyed them to the verandah of Mr. Carscallen's house, where they were cared for until the arrival of Coroner Price.

Wilbert Bush, who had charge of the engine, is a son of Mr. John J. Bush, and was a careful and experienced hand with threshing outfits. He was about thirty years of age, and unmarried.

Stanley Raymond, son of Mr. Albert Raymond, was about twenty-three old, and leaves a wife.

Charles Boyd, aged about forty, was also married, and leaves a wife and family. He was a son of Mr. George Boyd.

All three were from Sharp's Corners.

The whole community was startled by the shocking news, which soon spread far and wide, and deep sympathy is expressed for the bereaved wives, parents, brothers and sisters.

SYDENHAM CONCERT

Napanee Choral Union certainly put its right foot forward last Tuesday evening, when a number of its most worthy members made their first appearance before a Sydenham audience. Notwithstanding the raging snowstorm, Wesley Hall was crowded to the doors with people many of whom had come long distances from surrounding villages expecting a treat, and they were not disappointed.

Seldom indeed, do we hear a programme which is unanimously of such high merit and lofty tone as was the one on this occasion. It is difficult to particularize, as nearly every number was encored and several of them twice.

Of course everybody was taken with the voice of the leader, Mrs. VanLuven. It is so sweet and sweet, and so powerful.

Miss Ashley's whistling was a revelation. Nothing approaching it ever been heard by most of the audience, except from the warblers of the grove. The cheerfulness with which she responded to repeated encores even increased her hold upon the audience.

One of the most captivating given was "Annie Laurie," by Mrs. VanLuven, Miss Ashley, the Misses Hall, Miss Light and Mrs. Warman. The old Scotch air could be heard distinctly in the midst of most melodious variations. The people were so pleased that they asked to have it repeated later on in the evening.

Miss Light's solo, "Love's Solace," admirably suited her soft, rich, contralto voice, and called forth a hearty encore.

The male quartette, composed of Messrs. Baughan, Black, Harrison and Stacey, were revealed in both their numbers and showed plainly the effect of careful drill together.

Mrs. Lockridge and Miss L. Hall, in their instrumental as well as in their accompaniments showed they were not merely "filling in," but carried the audience with them in their delightful harmonies.

Miss Soby was the elocutionist of the evening. Her selections were well chosen, tastefully rendered and richly deserved the encore which she called forth.

Mr. Rose Hunter, as violinist, was the only entertainer not from Napanee. He is well known in these parts as a musical genius and on this occasion even added glory to his fame.

Our Napanee friends have their made a name for themselves here, and whenever they return to Sydenham may feel confident of a most cordial and enthusiastic reception.

After the concert, the entertainers and a number of those chiefly interested in the Society for whose benefit it was gotten up, spent a social hour at the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Jones, where refreshments were provided.

The gross returns amounted to nearly $30.

ADDRESS AND PRESENTATION.

North Fredericksburgh, Feby. 12th, 1907.

To Mr. and Mrs. James Dudgeon

Dear Friends,—We, the members and adherents of the Anderson Methodist and Sunday School, have come to, by common consent, to spend a social evening with you, and to wish you God-speed, on the eve of your departure from your old home in North Fredericksburgh, to your new home in Richmond. We do not wish to interfere with your future plans, believing that you are acting under Divine guidance and direction, but at the same time we cannot view your going away without a feeling of loss to the whole community, and to the church and Sunday School in particular. Your unfailing courtesy of invitation, your kind and obliging disposition, your consistent lives and your faithful attendance upon the means of grace, have endeared you to the hearts of all those who have had the pleasure of your acquaintance, and we have a warm place in our hearts, and indulge in the fond hope that we may be favored by your company still for many years to come. We feel that those who have had occasion to profit by your counsel and advice, will appreciate your real worth, and a knowledge of it may have some bearing on the making of the match. A friend indeed is one who will stick to you in adversity, and we feel that you have proved yourself such to us. Your consistent lives and faithful attendance upon the means of grace, have been a source of great benefit to the church of your choice, and we feel sure you will find a place where you can attend with profit and comfort, and be found faithful in attendance, faithful in contributing to the support and extension of the Gospel.

Every School we have had the very great pleasure of having you with us as a truly and cheerful helper. Some very faithful workers in the School, but in no case have we had a more faithful and cheerful worker than you have been. Your presence will be missed in the School, and we feel that we have lost a true friend. Your kind words of advice, and your patient and painstaking efforts to benefit the scholars, will not soon be forgotten by them. Your influence for good will be felt for years to come in the School, and we feel sure that the seed you have sown will bear fruit in the future. You were not only a worker in the School, but you were also a worker in the Church, and Sunday after Sunday you were found in your place in the choir, and your voice was always heard in the service of praise. You were also a worker in the Epworth League, and your presence will be missed there. We feel that we have lost a true friend, and we shall always remember you as such. We feel that we have lost a worker in the Temperance cause. We respect a good strong Temperance man, and we feel sure that your new home, and the people with whom you will associate, will find a home in your heart, as you have found a home in the hearts of the congregation and School.

REVIVAL SERVICES.

Tweed, Ont., Feb. 12, 1907.

Dear Hearts,—Since our last report we have had a very successful and very successful meeting. Z. Cook on the 3rd inst. as a result of the two weeks' meeting 27 came out for the Christian life, 22 of whom are after for membership. The closing service was held, when nine more rededicated their lives to God, and began a two weeks' service in the Methodist church, Tweed, and here again God most graciously poured out His Spirit in a way that has not been witnessed in many years. Many heads of families, who had been living in sin, were brought to the feet of Jesus, and many people from the town were converted. Many backsliders were reclaimed, and the whole church was revived. Many are under conviction, and we expect to see many more brought to the feet of Jesus. We will be here Sunday and Monday, and then go to Stirling for two weeks' meeting, and from there to Madoc for another two weeks' meeting. Pray for us.

A correspondent writes us that a number of sports could be if they could be from Deseronto, Bath and Napanee held a cracking main near Strathcona on Monday night last. This is the third or fourth that has been held this winter, and there are other to follow. I think the authorities should get after these fellows and put a stop to the matter, and hunt up the "sicks" they have in town, where they gamble and fight to-day on Sunday.

The members of Bayleigh Orange Lodge, No. 482, Stella, Amherst Island, will do honor to their oldest member, in the person of D. T. Finlay, on the evening of Feb. 21st. Mr. Finlay is leaving the island to take up his residence on the main shore, and on the night mentioned the lodge will show its esteem for the veteran member of the lodge, by presenting him with a silver tea set. The event promises to be a most interesting one. Mr. Finlay has been a resident of the island for some time, and his many friends regret very much his departure.

Mr. Albert E. Bicknell, formerly of Napanee and Camden East, died at his home in Rochester, N.Y., on Sunday last, 10th inst., in his thirtieth year. Deceased was the youngest son of Mrs. John T. Grange, and leaves a wife and three children. Deceased had been in poor health for the past year, and, in company with his wife and mother, left in the early part of the winter to spend the cold weather in Texas, and for a couple of months was at El Paso, Texas, but nothing could arrest the ravages of that dread disease, consumption, and a couple of weeks ago they hurried back with him to his home in Rochester.

TRIAL OR MISFORTUNE

NEEDED TO BRING OUT BETTER QUALITIES OF OUR NATURE.

MOSES' EXILE A NECESSITY

Sidetracked by Suffering Proved of Practical Value In Developing and Training the Jewish Lawgiver as a Great Leader—Thus Is Great Occult Law Vindicated; They Also Serve Who Only Stand and Wait.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1907, by Frederick Dixon, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Feb. 10.—In this sermon the preacher shows that as Moses' exile was necessary for his practical training and development as a great leader so there are periods in our own lives when we seem to be hopelessly sidetracked by some trial or misfortune, all of which are needed to bring out the better qualities of our nature. The text is Exodus ii. 15, "But Moses fled from the face of Pharaoh and dwelt in the land of Midian."

Hunger and hardship prove torture to those who have entire theirs, yet they entail the greatest suffering when they assail men who have once dwelt in the palaces of luxury. It is harder to be a pauper after one has once been a millionaire prince than it is to be a pauper when one has always been accustomed to mere rags. Moses could not have felt the hot, blistering sands of the desert as he did, nor would he have pardoned by his blistered tongue have been so distressing, if his desert journeying as he was fleeing away from Egypt to the land of Midian, near to old Mount Sinai, had been taken by a man who had never been anything else but a Hebrew slave. Moses, it is true, had been born a slave, but he had been accustomed to luxury through the adoption by which he became the son of Pharaoh's daughter. The finest garments crowded his wardrobe, and the most delightful were in his larder. The richest of palaces were his dwelling. The most learned sages conversant with all Egyptian lore were his teachers. The richest of couches were his reclining places. All that wealth and love could give were lavished upon him as a child, a boy and a man. Now as a hand-some prince and as one of the favored intellects of the court and an epicurean, who looked upon the merest luxuries of life as his necessities, we suddenly find him a disappointed fugitive, fleeing from his foster mother's home with a price upon his head. He is charged with the crime of murder. But, worse than that, his crime is aggravated by the fact that the murdered man was an Egyptian who was cruelly abusing one of the Hebrew slaves. In other words, Moses was hated as the champion of an alien race, that race a race of slaves. As an Egyptian prince, he had dared stand up and espouse the cause and the rights of the Hebrew slaves, who were the ungaid laborers of the kingdom of the Pharaohs.

I want to dwell this morning on the blessings which came to Moses in his forty years of exile in the land of the Midianites. I want to speak about the blessings which came to Moses in midlife. The period he spent in Midian extended from the age of forty to his eighty-first birthday, from forty to sixty, and from sixty to seventy, and from seventy to eighty. These twenty years of Moses' life are in some respects the most momentous of all Moses' career. Moses spent the first forty years as a beloved prince in Pharaoh's palaces. The second forty years he lived in the land of the Midianites. The third forty years of his life he spent in the wilderness with the Hebrews, leading them from the scene of Egyptian enslavement to the crystal gates of the Jordan. It is about the second epoch of Moses' life that I would speak today.

In the first place, God had a purpose in permitting Moses to be driven into exile. It was no doubt in that God's thoughts are not as man's thoughts nor God's ways as man's ways. The great Jehovah seemed to say to the future emancipator of the Hebrew race: "My son, I want to take you away from the palaces of Memphis and the temple of Karnak and all the regalia and splendor of the Egyptians. I want you to be alone with me out in the desert sands. I want to be with you and only have you talk with me. I want you to learn about the God of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob. I want you to be truly my child and not be a worshiper of Isis, and bull, and cats, and crocodiles, and eats, and lions, and frogs, and fishes, and snakes, and falcons. It is almost an impossibility for any man to live in the contaminating spiritual atmosphere where his loved ones are worshiping false gods without losing his own spiritual ears dulled. Come, my child, to the laroft Midian lands, where in the deep silence and lonely waste I can witness of the night I can talk with thee and then canst talk with me." Thus God led Moses far away from the Egyptian temples into the quietude and solitude of the desert might learn of him and study what God wanted him to do.

Was this a very wise plan? Where in all the world was the abomination of heathen worship made more attractive than in old Egypt? When we stand amid the ruins of Memphis, we find there that the sacred deity was worshiped in the form of a bull. These bulls were allowed to live for twenty years. Then they were put to death and their bodies embalmed like those of kings. Then, with great ceremony, their bodies were carried to magnificent tombs, which tombs themselves were looked upon as sacred shrines. Herodotus, the Greek historian, tells us that during the reign of Rameses II. the funeral of one of the bulls cost the king $30,000. When you estimate that a penny in olden times would hire a laborer for a whole day, that funeral cost in modern money at least a half million of dollars. At Sakkara the tombs for these sacred bulls were dug out of the solid rock a quarter of a mile long. The sarcophagi, or huge coffins, in which the embalmed bodies of these bulls were placed were each of a single monolithic block, 13 feet long, seven feet wide and eleven feet high.

These vast beautiful temples were erected for the worship of these Egyptian divinities. Every city of Egypt would have there been more beautiful buildings than those ancient temples of Jerusalem and Philae and Abydos, Edfu and Kom Ombos and Athribis and Esneh and Karnak, where the Pharaohs worshiped, and Sethos I., Hahoo and Luxor and Karnak. Truly, like Paul standing on Mars hill, when we see these huge structures in Egypt we perceive, "We men of old in Egypt, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious." Why, the great hall of pillars at Karnak looks as though the pillars had been hewed out of the very centre of the earth and set up in long rows for the dome of the heavens to rest upon, so massive they are. Each one of these columns is covered with the most exquisite carvings. So infinite are these carvings that, like a jungle of wild flowers, their individual beauties are lost in the multitude of their wonders. Do you wonder, amid the pernicious influences of such heathen worship that God said to Moses, "Go adopted son of Pharaoh's daughter; go to these children of Midian lands. Come into the quietude of the desert exile. Come and learn of me and my ways." Moses obeyed God's call. Now, my friends, just as Moses had his Midian exile to learn of God's thoughts and ways, so we, God's children, should have our Midian exile also.

God had another purpose in arranging the events which culminated in driving forth Moses from Pharaoh's palace. The adopted son of Pharaoh's daughter had to be taught by bitter experience what it was to suffer for justice before he was fitted to be the emancipator of his race. The bitter experience what it was to suffer for justice before he was fitted to be the emancipator of his race. The bitter smiting and suffering amid the tortures of Egyptian slavery. He had to lift to his lips the chalice of pain filled with his own scalding tears and drink the cup of sorrow to the dregs before he was fitted to wipe away the tears from the eyes of his fellow men. No man can truly sympathize with a man unless he has first been sick himself. No man can truly sympathize with the poor unless, like John Howard Payne, he has not a place to call his home, and lives in the poorest night he has gone to the rooms of a tenement where there was no fire in the cold stove because he has no coal in his empty, or into a hut where he has been little or nothing for some thing to eat and he has not a fire to rent piece to buy a loaf of bread to feed the gnawing of their hunger. Ah, yes, Moses in that Midian exile, by bitter experience, learned only too well the injustice which the Hebrew people in Egyptian slavery had to suffer! Let us study for a little while the bringing up of this marvelous boy of the east.

He was developed in his early days, as some of us were by our parents, by a hoboken, and by the keen, sharp wind was allowed to touch him. He breathed no bad, vitiated air. His palace bedroom overlooked the wonderful river Nile. There during the long hot months he saw the princes and princesses lounging in their boats, being pulled along by the stalwart slaves. He seemed to be made for the most part, of music and dancing and entertaining. The palace grounds in which the lad Moses used to play were a dream of beauty. Before he was well conscious of all, he were well clothed. Because he was kindly treated all people, if they behave themselves, are kindly treated. But one day he was disillusioned.

He was walking out early by the river Nile. Now, instead of being a child, he was a man in middle life, or about forty years old. While he was walking along the river bank he saw an Egyptian overseer begin to abuse one of the slaves. Moses was startled for his meekness, but he raised his staff and smote the Egyptian and killed him in his tracks. Then what happened? Moses ceased to be a prince. He was a fugitive slave. He tracked from place to place. As a Hebrew fugitive, he had to flee about as a rabbit runs from the baying of the hounds. By bitter personal experience he learned only too well what the poor Hebrews had to suffer under the agonizing strokes of the Egyptian slave masters. My friends, did you ever stop to think that God has sent you these troubles in order to teach you sympathize with those who are troubled in life? Did you ever stop to think that God has taken away your little child in order that you might become a gospel emancipator for the sufferings of your fellow men? The lands of Midian to which you go may be sacred lands, for they may comes in contact with God, but also where the supremacie heart of man learns to throb in unison with the suffering hearts of his enslaved brothers and sisters down in far-off Egypt.

It is only when a man like Paul has been the chief of sinners that he knows how to lead others into the gospel peace. It is only when a woman has stood by the casket of a dear husband that she is fully equipped to extend comforting messages to the newly-widowed heart. The story is told that many years ago King Henry of England, in disguise, was arrested by the royal guards as a thief for throwing around the palace grounds and carried off to jail at Poultry-Compter. There he stayed all the night long in his dungeon cell, suffering and hungry. No sooner was the king liberated than he commanded that all the prisoners in Compter should in future have a fire and food to eat. Thus is it with most of us. God locks us in jail in order that we may sympathize with the world's prisoners. He lays us upon beds of sickness in order to teach us to help the sick. He exiles us in far-off Midian lands in order that our hearts of love might beat in sympathy with the suffering hearts of our fellow men.

But there was still another reason why God shut Moses up in the Midian exile. It was to teach the future emancipator of the Hebrew race the great lessons of patience. No man is fit to be a true leader of men unless he can keep his temper under control and be willing to wait. "Patience is but lying to," once said Beecher, "and riding out the gale." But one of the hardest tasks on earth is to be willing to lie to and do nothing. Thus God fitted Moses for his great leadership over the Hebrews by teaching him the lessons of patience down in the Midian lands. He made Moses just wait for forty years, they passed, then two years, then five years, then ten years, then twenty years, then thirty years, and then forty years. All the time Moses was brooding over the injustices which were being perpetrated upon his people. But not until twoscore years had passed did God say to Moses: "My son, it is time for you. I will be with thee. Go up, and I will make you then an emancipator of an enslaved race." Oh, how some of us are chafing at the fact that God is keeping us in Midian instead of in activity! We want to do something to aid our fellow men, but God is saying to us as he spoke to Moses:

"My child, be patient. Thou canst never be a liberator of thy fellow men unless thou dost first learn to govern thyself. Thou must abide here in far-off Midian until thou dost learn this truth." Tell me, my friend, is not the greatest obstacle retarding thee from mighty usefulness the fact that you have never learned to govern yourself, you have never learned to wait when it is best to wait?

But have most of us learned the Christian lessons of patience? Like James Whitcomb Riley, can we thank God for the rain as well as the sunshine? When things go all right, then we are right. But when anything goes wrong we have not learned the lesson of gospel patience. Then we speak words which we ought not to speak and do things which we regret in the days of our lives. Naturalists tell us that the mighty winged eagles are sometimes been slain by the little humming birds. These smallest of birds, when you could crush it in your hand, have been known to perch themselves upon the backs of the mighty kings of the air. There they have sat and pecked and pecked until they have pecked into the brains of the eagles and tumbled their dead bodies down into the deep. From a quick temper, the inability to govern our anger in little things, have been known to absolutely nullify a man's influence for good. We are all right when everything is going all right. But we are all wrong when anything goes wrong. Thus God exiled Moses in Midian to teach him patience. Thus God is holding many of us in objecpeur positions until we learn to govern ourselves.

But again I learn that God sent Moses into his Midian exile to teach him the practicalities of life. Reared by his education was a sage, but Moses was a theorist. For many years he had been a cloud dweller or visionary dreamer. In all probability in the temple of Karnak he had learned all the theories of government. But theories and do not always meet as twin sisters in the cradle. He had developed his head, but not his hands. So God, as a father, fitted him for practical leadership, made him work with his hands and his feet as well as with his head. Thus Moses went down into the land of Midian, he not only had to go to work, but he had to hire himself out to do the work of a common shepherd. Have you not heard how he served the daughters of Reuel to water their flocks? Think Moses' struggle for daily bread scattered away from the Egyptian courtiers he had about God's providence and care. He learned that God meant man to help himself. Thus Moses led his people through the Red Sea, nothinks for granted. Through the camps and kept a watchful eye upon how his people were using what they did and how they cared for the temporal blessings with which God had surrounded them.

Some women grumble because so much of their time has to be spent in tending upon the kitchen stove, and in making the dresses for the children, and in sweeping the floors, and in making the beds, but remember that by these daily struggles of life God is teaching you that, though he is willing to help you, yet he also expects you to help yourselves. Men, it seems to you that most of your lives have to spent in the store. The butcher's bills and the baker's bills and the doctor's bills must be met. But, remember, God is developing you in this struggle for daily bread. He is saying to you: "Learn, my manchabee after my own image, but thou must earn thy food by the sweat of thy brow. By the thorns and the weeds I am making thee more and more like myself. Be not weary in well doing, for in due season ye shall reap if ye faint not." Can you not thank God because Moses had to tend sheep down in the far-off land of the Midianites?

But I cannot close this sermon without driving home one solemn warning which should sink into every heart. After this long Midian exile, after Moses had led the children of Israel through the Red Sea, after he had given to the Hebrew people the ten commandments of Sinai, what did Moses do? He sinned, just as so many other men have sinned when they have come into the temptations of their great life work. You know the sad, sad story. Moses sinned down by the rock of Meribah, and God said to his great lawgiver, "Moses, because you have failed, because you cannot not enter into the promised land." My friends, many of us have had our Midian exiles. Many of us are to-day in the full swing of our life work. God has fitted them us for our task shall we fail him? Will he refuse to let us enter the promised land at last because of our faithlessness? It was but for a moment that Moses sinned, remember that Moses failed, but that moment excluded him from the triumph. Let us, too, watch and pray lest in our activity! We want to do something to aid our fellow men, but God is saying to us as he spoke to Moses:

"My child, be patient. Thou canst never be a liberator of thy fellow men unless thou dost first learn to govern thyself. Thou must abide here in far-off Midian until thou dost learn this truth." Tell me, my friend, is not the greatest obstacle retarding thee from mighty usefulness the fact that you have never learned to govern yourself, you have never learned to wait when it is best to wait?

Clear, Frosty Winter Weather

Is so bracing, and invigorating that it often tends to over exertion, without our being aware of it.

Most of us lead such sedentary lives that when we take much exercise we often feel fatigued and depressed instead of refreshed. At such times a cup of will supply the nourishment, and stimulation required, sending a glow through the entire system.

For a change, try it some time with a dash of cold milk.

Sleeplessness.—When the nerves are unstrung and the whole body gives up to wretchedness, when the mind is filled with gloom and dread of impending ills the result of derangement of the digestive organs, sleeplessness comes to add to the distress. If only the weary victim could sink into a sweet oblivion for a while and temporary relief, Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will not only induce sleep, but will act beneficially that the subject will awake refreshed and restored to happiness.

"I say, D'Gray, have you ever heard that Shakespeare was a grand Rome who showed some truffles two miles off as well as a boy and the other as a man?"

"Aw, dash boy-no-aw, let me hush it."

Fit Plugging Energies Revived.—Constant application to business is a tax upon the energies, and if there is not relaxation, lassitude and depression are sure to intervene. These ronsas from stomachic troubles. There want of exercise brings on nervous irregularity, and the stomach ceases to assimilate food properly. In this condition Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will be found a recuperative of rare power, restoring the organs to healthful action, dispelling depression, and reviving the flagging energies.

LA GRIPPE

This distressing and unfortunately very common malady easily takes rank among the very "meanest" of the diseases to which people living in this climate are liable.

La Grippe is no respector of persons; it attacks the young and the old, the rich and the poor with the utmost impartiality.

Except in the cases where Pneumonia develops, La Grippe is seldom directly fatal; the real danger lies in the after effects. Even when the patient has fairly well recovered from an attack (and it is very hard to tell just when he has fully recovered), the muscles are relaxed, the nerves unstrung, the heart and lungs weak, the throat and bronchial tubes irritable and tender and the whole system depressed, run-down and in no condition to resist the attack of any other disease to which it may be exposed.

This condition is fraught with danger and demands instant and intelligent attention, the system must be built up and restored to a normal and healthy condition—advice easy to give, often very hard to follow.

The appetite is liable to be poor and the digestion impaired so that it is almost impossible to consume and digest sufficient ordinary food to do the work quickly and effectively. What is required is a concentrated food, palatable, easy to digest and containing the elements necessary to repair the waste which La Grippe has committed.

Just such a food is found in

a scientifically prepared emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, Iron and Phosphorus, palatable, digestible and effective. FERROL contains just what the run down system needs and all it requires. Cod Liver Oil to restore the lost flesh and make it what is left firm and healthy, Iron to enrich the impoverished blood and restore elasticity and firmness to the relaxed muscles, Phosphorus to tone the nerve and brain as nothing else will.

Two or three bottles of FERROL, taken after the acute stage of La Grippe has passed, will do more to repair damages than can possibly be accomplished in any other way. Try it and see.

SUDDEN DEATH.

A highly respected resident of Napanee, Mrs. George S. Hinch, died quite suddenly at the home of Mr. J. Reid, Enterprise, on Monday morning last. On Friday last she accompanied her daughter to Enterprise to visit Mr. Hinch's sister, Mrs. J. Reid, and was then in her usual health. While there she was taken ill and passed away on Monday morning. Deceased's maiden name was Nellie Sproule. She was born in Camden township, and was a woman beloved by all with whom she was acquainted. During her residence in Napanee all who had the privilege of her acquaintance learned to love and respect her. She leaves, besides her sorrowing husband, two children, William S. Hinch, of Winnipeg, and one daughter, Miss Lola Hinch. For the past twelve years she had been a resident of Napanee. The funeral took place on Wednesday to St. Luke's church, Camden East. Heart trouble was the cause of death.

PUBLIC SCHOOL INSPECTOR.

We extend our congratulations to Mr. D. A. Neelst, B.A., of Newburgh, whose recent appointment to the above office by the County Council at its last session has been ratified by the Government. Warden Gallagher, with W. G. Wilson, Solicitor for the County, accompanied by Messrs. Carscallen and Paul, M.A.'s, waited upon the Minister of Education, Hon. Dr. Pyne, and the Deputy Attorney General, on Tuesday last and were granted a most courteous and attentive hearing. The result was the endorsation of the appointment We understand Mr. Neelst will at once enter upon his duties. He is a gentleman of great experience in educational matters, of pleasing manner, and of ability. The public schools of this County will have in their Inspector one who will give every attention to their interests, and endeavor in every reasonable way to increase their utility.

COUNTY ROADS.

L. L. Gallagher, Warden, and Chas. Anderson, Chairman of Roads and Bridges Committee, accompanied by W. G. Wilson, Solicitor for the County, were in Toronto this week in consultation with Hon. Dr. Reaume, Minister of Public Works, over our County Road By-law. This vexed question has been dangling before the public for some time, and a disastrous trial upshot was looked for, but we are pleased to be able to announce to our readers that the above gentlemen, with the able assistance of our local members of the Legislature, Messrs. Carscallen and Paul, scored a splendid victory in the face of the disagreements which arose between the members of the deputation sent by the County Council of last year before the Minister. After presenting the case in all its aspects at length, and after full argument, the Department proceeded at once to give it consideration and arrived at the conclusion that the by-law designating County Roads should be approved of and the Government's share of moneys expended last year in the purchase of road machinery and building bridges should be paid to the County. The Government cheque will be towards $6,000. The By-law will receive the sanction of the Lieut. Governor.

LADIES' MUSICAL CLUB CONCERT.

A very appreciative and large audience greeted the Toronto Ladies Trio with Mr. Robert Stuart Pigott, on Tuesday evening, in the opera house. Miss Eugenie Quehen, pianist, Miss Lika Pletschke Adamson, violinist, and Miss Lois Watkis, cellist, are three of the most accomplished performers in the country on their respective instruments. The ladies played with a sympathetic ensemble, well finished execution and refined quality of tone. The violin and 'cello solo work of Miss Adamson and Miss Watkis, was interpreted with artistic judgment and brilliant execution. Miss Quehen's musicianly skill assisted greatly in making her a delightful accompanist. Not to have heard Mr. Pigott in his delightful songs is a great loss indeed. He is an artist of broad culture and refinement and his singing appeals to all who enjoy the work of a finished artist. As a dramatic reader he is brilliant and versatile. His fine bass voice and clear enunciation in the "Lady of Shalot" with trio accompaniment, was splendidly suited to the number and most impressive. It is not often we have the privilege or opportunity of listening to such a class of music, rendered in such an artistic and perfect manner. The Ladies' Musical Club are to be congratulated in securing such talent for their first public concert. The club wish to thank their friends and the public for their patronage and liberal support.

Business Hours: 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturdays, 10 p.m.

The Day-light Store

The well dressed woman; and what does it mean to be well dressed? Extravagantly dressed? Not necessarily. To be well dressed means—to be tastefully dressed; becomingly dressed; dressed appropriately for the particular occasion. Cellini's salt cellar was as famous in its way as his statue of Persens in its way. This is the principle of which we pick out our stocks—to have them inexpensive or expensive, simple or elaborate, always in good taste. Good taste is the keynote to the entire Madill Store, and, so broad is the range of styles and prices here, that satisfactory selection is assured, whether in inexpensively tasteful or expensively elegant attire.

YANKOUGHINET—LUND.

About thirty guests assembled at "Willow Grove," Morven, the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Lund, on Wednesday, 13th inst., to witness the solemnization of the marriage of their daughter, Mary Elizabeth, to Mr. Harvey Yankoughinet, of Carman, Manitoba. The bride looked charming in a gown of white silk, with chiffon and Irish lace trimmings, and carried a shower bouquet of pink and white roses. She was given away by her father. Through an avenue formed of sprays of white ribbon daintily held by two little maids, Rena and Evelyn, sisters of the bride, and a little lad, Earl Sharp, nephew of the bride, all of whom looked very sweet, clad in white, the bride entered the parlor to the strains of the wedding march played by Mrs. G. Fralick, and the bridegroom, Rev. Mr. Hastie, and the groomsman, Mr. Hall, were in attendance throughout the beautiful ceremony, which was performed by the bridegroom's cousin, assisted by the clergyman of the bride's parish. SYMPATHY FROM THE WARDEN.

Geo. S. Hipsh, Esq.,
Napanee, Ont.

My Dear Sir,—Allow me to extend to you my sympathy in the great loss you have sustained by the death of your beloved wife. Little we know what the morrow will bring, sorrow or joy, prosperity or labor, or pain, but this we do know that God is too good to be unkind, too wise to err. May He will you believe there with all your heart and trust in Him implicitly, and doubtless all things well and bear the loss with Christian fortitude?

I am yours truly,
L. L. GALLAGHER.

P.S.—I think I may enclose the private sympathy of the whole County Council and extend the same to you.

PRESENTATION.

On Tuesday evening, Feby. 12th, a large gathering of the Sand Hill Presbyterian congregation met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ezra Huffman, taking the form of a surprise party on them, Mr. Huffman with a handsome Rattan Rocker, accompanied by the following address:

Mr. and Huffman—We, the members of Sand Hill Presbyterian church, are assembled here this evening to present to you a token of our esteem in which we are held by our congregation.

You have for a number of years been one of our most energetic members of the congregation, and have, more than your share of work, to perform in connection with the church whether socially, financially or religiously.

You have at all times competently filled the position of elder, which is an important feature of church work, namely: the visiting of the sick and the bereaved, the aged and infirm. For such, and other qualifications which we might mention, you undoubtedly elevate the moral tone of a community. You have also proved by your highest esteem and good will to the minister and congregation, and we are pleased to us for many years to come. Therefore we would ask you to accept this token as a slight token of our appreciation of your services, and we pray that God's richest blessing, both spiritual and temporal, may rest on this service, may be yours through the coming years.

Signed on behalf of the congregation
SIMEON McCLUSKY,
Elder.

Mrs. Huffman in reply thanked them all for their gift and expressions of kindness for the many services she may have rendered.

Refreshments were then served and a pleasant social evening spent in music.

URIAH WILSON, M.P

To-day marks the 20th anniversary of the election of Uriah Wilson, M.P. to the House of Commons of Canada. He was first returned for the electoral district of Lennox on February 23rd, 1887, by a majority of 57, having previously filled the office of Councillor, Deputy Reeve, Reeve and Mayor of Napanee and Warden of the County of Lennox and Addington. Having offered himself for re-election in the general election of 1891, he was defeated by the late D. W. Allison by a majority of 54. The election was protested and the result quashed and Mr. Wilson was returned by a majority of 21 in one of the series of by-elections in which the Conservative candidate under Sir John A. Macdonald were victorious from Souiskaget to the West.

On the appeal to the County by Sir Charles Tupper in 1896, Mr. Wilson was again the Liberal Conservative candidate for Lennox and this time in a three-cornered fight between Edmund E. Sprague, Liberal, Richard

Heart Strength

Heart Strength, or Heart Weakness, means Nerve Strength or Nerve Weakness—nothing more. Positively, not one kind, but every kind. It is wholly actually diseased. It is almost always a hidden tiny little nerve that really is all at fault. This observe nerve—the cardiac, or Heart Nerve —simply needs and must have more power, more stability, more controlling, more governing strength. Without that the Heart must continue to fail; and the stomach and kidneys also have their same suffering source.

This clearly explains why, as a medicine, Dr. Shoop's Restorative has in the past done so much for weak and ailing Hearts. Dr. Shoop first sought the cause of all this painful, palpitating, suffocating heart distress. Dr. Shoop's Restorative—this popular prescription—is alone directed to those weak and wasting nerve centers. It builds; it strengthens; it stills—real, genuine heart help.

If you would have strong Hearts, strong digestion, strengthen those nerves — re-establish them as needed, with

HORSES AND GRASS.

Dr. [illegible], veterinary surgeon, Detroit, Mich., says that horses fed on timothy hay and oats are apt to be constipated, and that a feed of grass daily from spring until autumn is beneficial to them. Grass is also harmful to blood and stock diseases, and is a preventive of them. Dr. [illegible] says that horses fed on grass will not sweat unless very severely worked, and will not get the heaves. Grass is the only food that will keep the horse in perfect health. Horses that have been compelled to eat timothy hay and work all the year round should be given a change to grass for a month or two. They will soon show the effects of the change. Blood becomes thinner, digestion improves, and the animal's coat takes on a fine gloss.

GUARANTEED STOMACH REMEDY.

MI-O-NA WILL REFUND MONEY IF MI-O-NA FAILS TO CURE.

You may ask why it is that Mi-O-Na stomach tablets are sold under such a guarantee as that? It is because they are the only ones, when no other treatment for stomach trouble is sold in this manner.

The answer is simple and conclusive.

Other remedies for stomach trouble merely digest the food, while Mi-O-Na tablets tone the whole digestive system so that it soon becomes able to cure itself of all food troubles.

If you do not use your arm or leg for a month, the muscles become flabby and weak and you have to resort to artificial help to get the limb back with the stomach muscles. If they are not used, they become so weak that it is necessary to continue using a digestive aid for the food you eat.

On the other hand, when you use stomach tablets the stomach gets the strength that you can give up the use of artificial help.

Mi-O-Na costs 50c a box and does not contain a particle of opium or other narcotic or injurious drug.

If you think that your money will be refunded should you only get part benefit from Mi-O-Na, you will not be satisfied with the results, for we will be sent by mail on receipt of price.

Write us if you have any other questions to ask us about your symptoms, and one of our physicians will give you his opinion free of charge. Address Mi-O-Na Co., Stuart Building, Bond Block, Main Street, Buffalo, N.Y.

THE HOUND OF THE BASKERVILLES

BY A. CONAN DOYLE,

Author of "The Green Flag" and "The Great Boer War."

"No one could have known. We only decided after I met Dr. Mortimer."

"But Dr. Mortimer was no doubt already stopping there?"

"No, I had been staying with a friend," said the doctor. "There was no possible link connecting us, nor intended to go to this hotel."

"Hum! Someone seems to be very deeply interested in your movements." Out of the envelope he took a half-sheet of foolscap paper folded into four. This he opened and spread flat upon the table, across the middle of it a single sentence had been formed by the expedient of pasting printed words upon it. It ran: "As you value your life or your reason keep away from the moor." The word "moor" only was printed in ink.

"Now," said Sir Henry Baskerville, "perhaps you will tell me, Mr. Holmes, what in thunder is the meaning of that, and who it is that takes so much interest in my affairs?"

"What do you make of it, Dr. Mortimer? Do you consider that there is nothing supernatural about this, at any rate?"

"No, sir, but it might very well come from someone who was convinced that the hellishness is supernatural."

"What hellishness?" asked Sir Henry, sharply. "It seems to me that all you gentlemen know a great deal more than I do about my own affairs."

"You shall have our full knowledge before you leave this room, Sir Henry. I promise you that," said Sherlock Holmes. "We will confine ourselves for the present with your permission to this very interesting document, which must have been put together and posted yesterday evening. Have you yesterday's Times, Watson?"

"It is in the corner-seat."

"Might I trouble you for it—the inside page, please, with the leading articles?" He glanced swiftly over it, running his eyes up and down the columns. "Capital article this on Free Trade. Permit me to give you an extract from it. You may be guided into thinking that your own special trade or your own industry will be encouraged by a protective tariff, but it stands to reason that such legislation must in the long run keep away wealth from the country, diminish the value of our imports, and lower the general conditions of life in this island." What do you think of that, Watson?" cried Holmes, in high glee, rubbing his hands together with satisfaction. "Don't you think that is an admirable sentiment?"

Dr. Mortimer looked at Holmes with an air of professional interest, and Sir Henry Baskerville turned a pair of puzzled dark eyes upon me.

"I don't know much about the tariff or the things of that kind," said he; "but it seems to me we've got a bit off the trail so far as that note is concerned."

"On the contrary, I think we are particularly hot upon the trail, Sir Henry. Watson here knows more about my methods than you do, but I fear that even he has not quite grasped the significance of this remarkable document."

"No, I confess that I see no connection."

"And yet, my dear Watson, there is no very close connection that the one word not extracted out of the other. You, your, 'life,' 'reason,' 'value,' 'keep away,' 'from the.' Don't you see now whence these words have been taken?"

"By thunder, you're right! Well, if that isn't smart!" cried Sir Henry.

"If any possible doubt remained it is settled by the fact that 'moor' is printed 'from the' are cut out in one piece."

"Well, now—so it is!"

"Really, Mr. Holmes, this exceeds anything which I could have imagined," said Dr. Mortimer, gazing at my friend in amazement. "I could understand anyone saying that the words were from a newspaper; but that you should know which, and add that it came from the leading article, is really one of the most remarkable things that I have ever known. How did you do it?"

"I presume, doctor, that you could tell the shell of a negro from that of an Esquimaux?"

"Most certainly."

"But how?"

"Because that is my special hobby. The differences are obvious. The supra-orbital crest, the facial angle, the maxillary curve are—"

"But this is my special hobby, and the differences are equally obvious. There is as much difference to my eyes between the leaded bourgeois type of a Times article and the slovenly print of an evening halfpenny paper as there could be between your negro and your Esquimaux. The detection of types is one of the most elementary branches of knowledge to the special expert in crime, though I confess that once when I was very young I confused the Leeds Mercury with the Western Morning News. But a reader of the obvious could tell them, and these words could have been taken from nothing else. As it was done yesterday the strong probability was that we should find the words in yesterday's issue."

"So far as I can follow you, then, Mr. Holmes," said Sir Henry Baskerville, "someone cut out this remarkable message with a scissors—"

"Nail-scissors," said Holmes. "You can see that it was a very short-bladed scissors, since the cutter had to take two snips over 'keep away' or 'from.'"

"That is so. Someone, then, cut out the message with a pair of short-bladed scissors, pasted it with paste—"

"Gum," said Holmes.

"With gum on to the paper. But I want to know why the word 'moor' should have been written?"

"Because he could not find it in print. The other words were all in common print and might be found in any news, but 'moor' could be less common.

"Why, of course, that would explain it. Have you read anything else in this message, Mr. Holmes?"

"There are one or two indications, and yet the utmost pains have been taken to remove all clues. The address has been printed in rough characters. But the Times is a paper which is seldom found in any hands but those of the highly educated. We may take it, therefore, that the letter was composed by an educated man who wished to pose as an uneducated one, and his effort to conceal his own writing suggests that that writing might be known, or come to be known, by you. Again, you will observe that the words are not gummed on in an accurate line, but that some are much higher than others. 'Life,' for example, is quite out of its proper place. That may point to carelessness or it may point to agitation and hurry upon the part of the writer. On the whole I lean to the latter view, since the matter was evidently important, and it is unlikely that the composer of a letter would be careless. If he were in a hurry it opens up the interesting question why he should be in a hurry. Has any letter posted up to early morning to-day reached Sir Henry before he would leave his hotel. Did the composer fear pursuit? Now—and, by whom?"

"We are coming now rather into the region of guess work," said Dr. Mortimer.

"Precisely," said Holmes, "and therefore I suggested that we should turn to something more solid. But this message, presumably, is from someone who has local knowledge. It would suggest that the writer is in town and that he stayed at a third-class hotel. How many third-class hotels are there in the immediate neighborhood of Charing Cross? Considerably over a dozen, I should imagine. You see how one can limit the field in a case of this sort. Already we have contracted our research for the source of the letter to one of fifteen third-class hotels. That is something gained. Then, again, the choice of words is significant. 'Beware' is rather a common word, but I should be surprised if 'avoid' were not so. Did you notice that he uses the Americanism 'guess' instead of 'suppose'? I should lay stress upon that point. Then, 'evil' is an unusual word. Curious that it should occur in both letters. Did you notice that?"

"No, I did not."

"Well, there is no doubt about it. He has used it twice, showing that it was in his mind. Perhaps he is not an Englishman. Now, you see, we have contracted our field from fifteen hotels to fifteen dozen people. It is possible that a further study of the text may reduce it to fifteen hundred. Well, we shall leave that at present. The next point is the danger which dogs your footsteps from the moment you leave London. Pray, what is your connection with that city?"

"I have none save that I have inherited a considerable property there."

"Ah, indeed! Perhaps you have never visited your relations, Mr. Baskerville?"

"No, sir, I have never been in London."

"Then it is your property which is the attraction. Or perhaps there is some other reason? Pardon me, but the situation is an unusual one, and I am groping in the dark."

"I am sure that we are very much indebted to you for your assistance," said Dr. Mortimer, in a voice which showed that he was very much surprised by the new development. "I confess that what you say is new and unexpected."

"Have you anything to add, Sir Henry? Have you had any visitors or received any communication which bears upon the matter?"

"Nothing occurs to me at the moment," said the baronet. "I think that you must be aware that, living as I have done for nearly all my life in the backwoods, I am quite unversed in town ways. I should be glad to have your advice, but I really do not know what to say."

"Then I would suggest that you entrust the matter entirely to me. I shall be happy to advise you how to act before we separate. I trust that you will favour me with a visit in my room before you go back to the north. I should like to have a little chat over your future plans. I have a couple of hours free now, I hope that we may see some further light upon the affair. Perhaps a ramble would do you good. Lunch with me at the Cafe Royal at one and I shall be glad to have arranged my ideas by then."

Sir Henry smiled.

"I don't know much of British life yet, for I have spent nearly all my time in the States and in Canada. But I hope that to lose one of your boots is not part of the ordinary routine of life over here."

"You have lost one of your boots?"

"My dear sir," cried Dr. Mortimer, "it is only mislaid. You will find it when you return to the hotel. What is the use of troubling Mr. Holmes with trifles of this kind?"

"Well, he asked me for anything outside the ordinary routine."

"Precisely," said Holmes, "however foolish the incident may seem. You have lost one of your boots, you say?"

"Well, mislaid it, anyhow. I put them both outside my door last night, and there was only one in the morning. I could get no sense out of the chap who cleans them. The worst of it is that I only bought the pair last night in the Strand, and I have never had them on."

"If you have never worn them, why did you put them out to be cleaned?"

"They were tan shoes and had never been varnished. That was why I put them out."

Then I understand that on your arrival in London yesterday you went out at once and bought a pair of boots?"

"I did a good deal of shopping. Dr. Mortimer here went round with me. You see, if I am to be squire down there I must dress the part, and I may be that I have got a little careless in my ways out West. Among other things I bought these brown boots—gave six dollars for them—and had one stolen before ever I had them on my feet."

"It seems a singularly useless thing to steal," said Dr. Mortimer, promptly confess that I share Dr. Mortimer's belief that it will not be long before the missing boot is found."

"And now gentlemen," said the baronet with decision, "it seems to me that I have spoken quite enough about the little that I know. It is time that you kept your promise and gave me a full account of what we are all driving at."

"Your request is a very reasonable one," Holmes answered. "Dr. Mortimer, I think you could do better than to tell your story as you told it to us."

Thus encouraged, our scientific friend drew his papers from his pocket, and presented the facts upon which we had done upon the morning before. Sir Henry Baskerville listened with the deepest attention, and with an occasional exclamation of surprise. Well, I seem to have come into an inheritance with a vengeance," said he when the long narrative was finished. "Of course, I've heard of the hound ever since I was in the nursery. It's the pet story of the family, as you must know if you've stayed with us down there. No wonder it has taken hold of my imagination, but as to what you say, I'm dashed if I can see anything but a piece of tomfoolery. How could anyone hope to frighten a man by sending him a printed piece of paper? And who is likely to take any notice of such nonsense? As to there being any connection between the hound and poor old Uncle Charles, that is clearly the merest chance. Why, man, you don't believe in such things, surely?"

"I can only say that I am convinced that the supernatural view is the right one."

"But you have spoken of a man on the moor. Surely we have him under our observation. Then, again, why should anyone in London trouble himself about our affairs?"

"How the world can you say that?"

"If you examine it carefully you will see that both the pen and the ink have given the writer trouble. The pen has sputtered twice in a single word, and has run dry three times in a short address, showing that there was very little ink in the bottle. Now, a private pen or ink-bottle is seldom allowed to be in such a state, and the combination of the two must point to a man who has been much better off in the past. Then, again, the choice of the words 'post to-day' shows that the writer was hurried, and was in a state of nervous fear lest he should change his mind before post time. Why should he be hurried, unless the post is the critical point for him—the moment when it is absolutely necessary that something should be done if it is to be done at all? Why should he be nervous unless he fears interference? Again, you may have observed that the address is printed in rough characters. But the Times is a paper which is seldom found in any hands but those of the highly educated. We may take it, therefore, that the letter was composed by an educated man who wished to pose as an uneducated one, and his effort to conceal his own writing suggests that that writing might be known, or come to be known, by you. "Well, he asked me for anything outside the ordinary routine."

"Precisely," said Holmes, "however foolish the incident may seem. You have lost one of your boots, you say?"

"Well, mislaid it, anyhow. I put them both outside my door last night, and there was only one in the morning. I could get no sense out of the chap who cleans them. The worst of it is that I only bought the pair last night in the Strand, and I have never had them on."

"If you have never worn them, why did you put them out to be cleaned?"

"They were tan shoes and had never been varnished. That was why I put them out."

"Then I understand that on your arrival in London yesterday you went out at once and bought a pair of boots?"

"I did a good deal of shopping. Dr. Mortimer here went round with me. You see, if I am to be squire down there I must dress the part, and I may be that I have got a little careless in my ways out West. Among other things I bought these brown boots—gave six dollars for them—and had one stolen before ever I had them on my feet."

"It seems a singularly useless thing to steal," said Dr. Mortimer, promptly confess that I share Dr. Mortimer's belief that it will not be long before the missing boot is found."

"And now gentlemen," said the baronet with decision, "it seems to me that I have spoken quite enough about the little that I know. It is time that you kept your promise and gave me a full account of what we are all driving at."

"Your request is a very reasonable one," Holmes answered. "Dr. Mortimer, I think you could do better than to tell your story as you told it to us."

Thus encouraged, our scientific friend drew his papers from his pocket, and presented the facts upon which we had done upon the morning before. Sir Henry Baskerville listened

"Exactly," "What a pity we did not get the number!"

"My dear Watson, clumsy as I have been, you surely do not seriously imagine that I neglected to get the number? 2704 is our man. But that is no use to us for the moment."

"I fail to see how you could have done more."

"On observing the cab I should have instantly turned and walked in the other direction. I should then at my leisure have hired a second cab and followed the first at a respectful distance, or better still, have driven to the Northumberland Hotel and waited there. When our unknown had followed Baskerville home we should have had the opportunity of playing his own game upon himself, and seeing where he made for. As it is, by an overzealous exhibition of energy, which was taken advantage of with extraordinary audacity and presence of mind by our opponent we have betrayed ourselves and lost our man."

We had been sauntering slowly down Regent Street during this conversation, and Dr. Mortimer, with his companions, had halted a few paces in front of us.

"There is no object in our following them," said Holmes. "The shadow has departed and will not return. We have lost our best remaining cards and have in our hands, and play them with decision. Could you swear to that man's face within the cab?"

"I could swear only to the beard."

"And so could I—from which I infer that in all probability it was a false one. A clever man upon so delicate an errand has no use for a beard save to conceal his features. Come in at this door."

He turned into one of the district messenger offices for which he was warmly greeted by the manager.

"Ah, Wilson, I see you have not forgotten the little case in which I was so fortunate as to help you?"

"No, sir, indeed I have not. You saved my good name, and perhaps my life."

"My dear fellow, you exaggerate. I have some recollection, Wilson, that you had among your boys a lad named Cartwright, who showed some ability during the investigation?"

"Yes, sir, he is still with us."

"Could you ring him up?—thank you! And I should be glad to have change of this five-pound note."

A lad of fourteen, with a bright, keen face, had obeyed the summons of the manager. He stood now gazing with great reverence at the famous detective.

"Let me have the Hotel Directory," said Holmes. "Thank you! Now, Cartwright, there are the names of twenty-four hotels, all in the immediate neighborhood of Charing Cross. Do you see?"

"Yes, sir."

"You will visit each of these in turn."

"Yes, sir."

"You will begin in each case by giving the outside porter one shilling. Here are twenty-three shillings."

"Yes, sir."

"You will tell him that you want to see the waste paper of yesterday. You will say that a most important telegram has miscarried and that you are looking for it. You understand?"

"Yes, sir."

"But what you are really looking for is the contents of the Times with some holes cut in it with scissors. Here is a copy of the Times. It is this page. You could easily recognize it, could you not?"

"Yes, sir."

"In each case the outside porter will send you to the hall porter, to whom also you will give a shilling. Here are twenty-three shillings. You will then be shown into a room containing a number of waste paper baskets. You will look through the contents of the twenty-three that the waste of the day before has been turned or removed. In the three other cases you will be shown a heap of paper and you will look for this page of the Times among it. The odds are enormously against your finding it. There are seventy-five chances to one against success. Let me have a report by wire at Baker Street this evening. And now, Watson, it only remains for us to find out by wire the identity of the Northumberland Hotel. Then we will drop into one of the Bond Street picture galleries and fill in the time until we are due at the hotel."

CHAPTER V.

Sherlock Holmes had, in a very remarkable degree, the power of detaching his mind at will. For two hours the strange business in which he had been involved appeared to be entirely forgotten, and he was absorbed in the pictures of the modern Belgian masters. He would talk of nothing but art, of which he had a very crudest ideas, from our leaving the gallery until we found ourselves at the Northumberland Hotel.

"Sir Henry Baskerville is upstairs expecting you," said the clerk. "He asked me to show you up at once when you came."

"Have you any objection to my looking at your register?" said Holmes. "Not in the least, sir."

The book showed that two names had been added after that of Baskerville. One was Theophilus Johnson and family, of Newcastle; the other Mrs. Oldmore and maid, of High Lodge, Alton.

"Surely that must be the same Johnson whom I used to know," said Holmes to the porter. "A lawyer, is he not, with a wooden leg and a limp?"

"No, sir, this is Mr. Johnson, the coal-owner, a very active gentleman, not older than yourself."

"Surely one of them is dealer about Mr. trade?"

"No, sir; he has used this hotel for many years, and he is very well known to us."

"Ah, that settles it. Mrs. Oldmore, too; I seem to remember the name. Excuse my curiosity, but often in calling upon one friend one finds another."

"She is an invalid lady, sir. Her husband was once Mayor of Gloucester. She always comes to us when she is in town."

"Thank you; I am afraid I cannot claim her acquaintance. We have established a most important fact by these questions, Watson," he continued, in a low voice, as we went up stairs together. "We know now that the people who are so interested in our friend have not settled down in his own hotel. That means that while they are, as we have seen, exceedingly anxious to watch him they are equally anxious that he should not see them. Now, this is a most suggestive fact."

"What does it suggest?"

"It suggests—helloa, my dear fellow, what on earth is the matter?"

As we came round the top of the stairs we had run up against Sir Henry Baskerville himself. His face was crimson with anger, and he held an old and dusty boot—in one of his hands. So furious was he that he was hardly articulate, and when he did speak it was in a much broader and more Western dialect than any which we had heard from him in the morning.

"Seems to me they are playing me for a sucker in this hotel," he cried. "They'll find they've started in to monkey with the wrong man unless they are careful. By thunder, if this chap can't find my missing boot there will be trouble. I can take a joke with the best, Mr. Holmes, but there's got a bit over the mark this time."

"Still looking for your boot?"

"Yes, sir, and mean to find it."

"Why, you said that it was a new brown boot."

"So it was, sir. And now it's an old black one."

"What! you don't mean to say—"

"That's just what I do mean to say. I only had three pairs in the world—the new brown, the old black, and the patent leathers, which I am wearing. Last night they took one of the brown ones, and to-day they have sneaked one of the black. Well, have you got it? Speak out, man, and don't stand staring!"

An agitated German waiter had appeared upon the scene.

"No, sir; I have made inquiry all over the hotel, but I can hear no word of it."

"Well, either that boot comes back before sundown or I'll see the manager and tell him that I go right straight out of this hotel."

"It shall be found, sir—I promise you that it shall be found within an hour."

"I'll give it two," said Sir Henry, in a voice which showed that he was controlling himself with an effort. The German retired. "Well, what do you think of it, Mr. Holmes?"

"I think it well worth looking into."

"I'll prefer to walk, for this affair has flurried me rather."

"I'll see you at Holmes in a walk, with pleasure," said his companion.

"Then we meet again at two o'clock. Au revoir, and good morning!"

We heard the steps of our visitors descend the stair and the bang of the front door. In an instant Holmes had changed from the languid dreamer to the man of action.

"Your hat and boots, Watson, quick! Not a moment to lose!" He rushed into his room in his dressing-gown and was back again in a few seconds in a frock-coat. We hurried together down the stairs and into the street. Dr. Mortimer and Baskerville were still visible about two hundred yards ahead of us in the direction of Oxford Street.

"Shall I run on and stop them?"

"Not for the world, my dear Watson. I am perfectly satisfied with your company if you will tolerate mine. Our friends are wise, for it is certainly a very fine morning for a walk."

He quickened his pace until we had decreased the distance which divided us by about half. Then, still keeping a hundred yards behind, we followed into Oxford Street and so down Regent Street. Once our friends stopped and stared into a shop window, upon which Holmes did the same. An instant afterwards he gave a little cry of satisfaction, and, following the direction of his eager eyes, I saw that a hansom cab with a man inside which had halted on the other side of the street was now slowly proceeding onwards again.

"There's our man, Watson! Come along! We'll have a good look at him, if we can do no more."

At that instant I was aware of a bushy black beard and a pair of glittering eyes turned upon us through the side window of the cab. Instantly the trap-door at the top flew up, something was screamed through the aperture, and the cab flew madly off down Regent Street. Holmes looked around for another, but no empty one was in sight. Then he dashed in wild pursuit amid the astonishment of the traffic, but the start was too great, and already the cab was out of sight.

"There now!" said Holmes, bitterly, as he emerged panting and white with anger from the throng of vehicles. "Was ever such bad luck and such bad management, too? Watson, Watson, if you are an honest man you will record this also and set it down to my credit."

"Who was the man?"

"I have not an idea."

"A spy?"

"Well, it was evident from what we have learned of Baskerville that he was very closely shadowed by someone since he has been in town. How else could it be known so quickly that it was the Northumberland Hotel which he had chosen? If they had followed him the first day I argued that they would follow him also the second. You may have observed that I twice strolled over to the window while Dr. Mortimer was reading his papers."

"Yes, I remember."

"I was looking out for loiterers in the street, but I saw none. We are dealing with a clever man, Watson. This matter cuts very deep, and though I have not finally made up my mind whether it is a benevolent or a malevolent agency which we have to deal with, I am conscious always of power and design. When Sir Charles fell I at once followed them in the hopes of marking down their invisible attendant. So will was he that he had not trusted himself upon foot, but he had availed himself of a cab, so that he could loiter behind or dash past them and so escape their notice. His method and the additional precaution that if they were to take a cab he was all ready to follow them. It has, however, one obvious disadvantage."

"It puts him in the power of the cab-

If out of town read the following discriptions of new fabrics.

REAL IRISH ORGANDIES and DIMITIES. We are agents for McBride's Dimities and Organdies, the most famous maker of these goods in Ireland. The designs are all small neat effects such as buds, sprays, leaves, etc., 25c yd.

EDNA VOILE. An American cloth brought out this year. The designs are mostly in combinations of stripes and checks, 35c yd.

JUST AS DELAINE is well named. You have to feel them to detect cotton. Plain ground with small neat designs such as dots, diamonds, spots, etc., 12 1-2c yd.

NEAR SILK TAFFETA. A cross between a gingham and silk. Designs mostly hair line checks, black and white, blue and white, green and rose, 18c and 20c.

FOR THE WORLDLY WISE

POSSESSIONS THEY SEEM TO HAVE SUBJECT TO RIGHT USE.

MUST MAKE ACCOUNT TO GOD

A Seemingly Contradictory Saying of the Master Made Clear By the Preacher's Illustration of a Successful Man's Experience in Business—Right Use of One's Talents Insisted Upon.

Revised according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year one thousand nine hundred and seven, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Feb. 17.—In dealing in a new and strikingly personal way with the parable of the talents the preacher shows how it applies to men of means and influence in every position in life to-day. The text is Luke viii, 18, "Whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that which he seemeth to have."

It is amazing how the addition of one little word may change the whole meaning of a sentence. For a long time I could not understand the twenty-ninth verse of the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew. Christ in his wonderful way had been telling the parable of the man who went into the far country after he had delivered unto his servants his goods. The story is almost identical with the 25th verse of your own life.

For years and years you were a slave to business. You kept up a brave front, but for nearly a quarter of a century you were trembling up on the brink of bankruptcy. The children were young and had to be supported and educated. Your business had not yet been well established. The business world was eyeing you askance. You had to buy your goods on long credit and therefore pay higher for them than if you had the ready cash. The result: It was grind, grind, economize. But after a time the financial condition made a turn for the better. Two of your boys finished their schooling and were able to support themselves. One of your daughters married. With the lessening of expenses at home there came a marvelous growth at the store. Instead of living upon the "narrow lane of difficulty" you moved into Easy street. One night you came home and after dinner you said to your wife: "My dear, I have fought the battle of life and won it. It is time for us to take a wedding trip. We did that very year in which we married. We were too poor. Let us next spring start upon a trip around the world." "Oh, John," she said, "can you afford it?" "Yes," you answered. "And I think we can take our youngest daughter along. She is all we have left at home."

At once you began to make preparations. Your wife planned for the care of the house. You made the arrangements at the store. You called in one employe and said, "Harry, you will take charge of that department." You called in another and said, "Joe, you take charge of that department." To another man you gave some task and to another a different responsibility. Then one evening you called your only daughter you were away from home nearly a year. When you returned you called your various employes to render an account of their stewardship. You rewarded each man according as he had fulfilled the trust committed to his charge. Such is the modern parable of the parable in the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew.

Now, when the good man of this parable found out that those on whom he had failed to fulfill his trust he says, "Take therefore the talent from him and give it unto him who hath ten talents, for unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have an abundance, but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath." "Strange," I used to say when I read these words, "How can anything be taken away from a man who has nothing?" Can nothing come from nothing? Yet here in this parable of Matthew we read, "From him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath." "I cannot understand these words," I used to say; "I cannot understand them."

But some time ago I had a strange illumination of the meaning of this chapter. Just as you enter a dark room and go to the window and lift the green shade and let a flood of sunlight pours in, so I had a windowful of gospel light poured upon these words. One day while reading the expression as found in Luke I came upon the word "seemeth" in these words. One day while reading the expression as found in Luke I came upon the word "seemeth." Then I read the conclusion of the parable in St. Matthew in conjunction with my text in Luke, and I found that the two verses meant practically the same. This is the way I read the two verses: "Take heed therefore how you hear [whether you only seem to hear] for unto him shall be given and whosoever hath not from him shall be taken away even that which he seemeth to have." "Oh," I exclaimed, "I see it! When a man is untrue to the trust God has given to him, he may seem to have wealth and happiness, he may seem to be blessed with joys which are denied the children of God, but there shall come a time when he shall stand before all men stripped of his false seemings. To pretend to have does not prove that we have. That word "seemeth" is the pivotal word of my sermonic theme. I want to prove to you that no man can eternally possess anything that is good and true and pure unless he possesses them through his fidelity and consecration to Jesus Christ. No man has gifts and talents given to him that therewith he may do effective service for Christ and he uses them for his own advantage or does not use them at all, he will be called to account at the bar of God. Then God will say, "Take away even that which he seemeth to have."

The most absurd assumption, in the first place, of a worldly man is to suppose the gold, or the land, or the railroad stocks, or the Monopoly mines, of which he has control for a few years are his and his alone. They are no more his than the talent which the master gave to his unfaithful servant in the parable was his. They are more than likely the money which you give to a Wall street broker to buy for you some Pennsylvania railroad stock is his. They are no more his than the tree growing in my fruit yard belongs to the robins who come there each year to build their nests in it. They are no more his than the waters which flow down from the Adirondack mountains and work their way past the Highlands and cool themselves under the shadows of the Palisades belong to the man who live on an estate which rims the banks of the Hudson.

I might feast my eyes upon that water if I would on a moonlight night. I might launch my skiff into those waters and with powerful stroke fill the blades of my oars with its treasures so that when those drops fall back into the bosom of the stream they look like a beautiful collection of sparkling gems. But I could not possibly lift or change the course. If I tried to change the current of the Hudson river those who live below me would rise up in wrathful protest and cry: "Stop! Stop! That river belongs to us as much as to you. You have no right to divert it from your gardens and fields if you will, but after your flowers and corn and grass have drunk their fill you must let those waters flow back into the river again. You shall not dam up the waterward flow which will bring those waters to us. You can use the river as it creeps past your land, but that that river belongs to us and not to you." So with the great river of gold. The worldly wise rich man may say, "This land is mine, these rivers are mine, this endless system of railroad tracks is mine, these newspapers and these office buildings are mine." "No," answers God, "not thine, but mine. I give thee the use of them for a few years, but I shall require back the talents to the servants in the parable. But soon I shall call them to render back again." "All?" "Yes, all. Then I shall demand an account of thy stewardship." Do you not see what I am driving at? The rich man may seem to own his land, but he does not. He is a trustee and a trustee alone. Soon at the brink of the grave he will mysteriously find himself stripped of all.

When I see this cringing, crawling, unfaithful agent of the parable being deprived of his one talent, which he has hidden in his bank vaults, as a dog sides a bone, I cannot shut my ears to the false assumption of virtue with which this unfaithful servant tried to deceive his master's character. He seems to say: "Master, I know what a tyrant thou art. I know how unrelenting and bitter thou wouldst be if I made one mistake in my investments. I knew that if I made a poor purchase and lost any of the capital thou wouldst never cease to hound me and that thou wouldst demand all thy gold back or thy life's blood. And so, on account of the fear of making a mistake, I did nothing. Here then hast the money that is thine." What happened? Why, one mighty grip the master tore into shreds the false and hypocritical conceit which covered that craven heart. With one characteristic verbal blow he silenced those lying lips. He tore away all the unfaithful servant's pretenses in trying when he said: "Hypocrite and falsifier thou art. Thou hast not only proved recreant to the trust I gave to thee, but art even now trying to cover that guilt with perjury and lies. Thou are doing as most unfaithful servants and evildoers do. When they are convicted of wrongdoing they try to lay the blame at some one else's door." Oh, my friends, are you and I taking that course? When we think of our unused talents, when our consciences tell us that God justly expects to use the gifts that are lying idle, what is our answer? Is our excuse that other men prevent us or that God is a hard master in requiring us to work?

Then, again, there are men who would make their inactivity appear as true kindness. How often do we see the unfaithful servants' life with an assumed expression of virtue upon their countenances! They are saying: "I know people say I am selfish. I know people say that I am mean. But what can I do? I feel that I might be able to help others. But if I help them I will only do them an injury. It is better for every man to learn to help himself rather than to be helped by his brothers. The easiest way to make a well man a cripple is to give him a crutch. The easiest way to make a lame man well is to take away his crutch and compel him to use his weak limb. I am my neighbor's friend and God's disciple, although people know it not."

My friends, do not try to defend your sinful, selfish actions by putting the blame of your sins upon others, do you honestly expect that you are telling the truth? No, you know you are not. Like the unfaithful servant in the parable, you are trying to cover up your tiger claws with sheep's wool. You are trying to shield your own sins with a tissue of lies. People admire the strong wing on which the eagle soars, but a great preacher took a different view of its flight. "Do you see," he said, "yonder eagle, how it mounts? Does it care for the ethereal blue or aspire to commune with the stars of the heavens? Not a whit, then why does it mount? It has a weight with the bird. And yet you will not wonder that it soars when you remember that it thus obtains a broader range of vision and so becomes the more able to provide for its nest. The bird mounts toward heaven, but it always keeps its eye upon the earth." So it is with us. It soars that it may flash downward with full sweep upon the foul thing that is trying to do some sinful men. With their honeyed words they seem to be mounting toward the heavenly blue. They pretend to be living an unselfish life. But they are only mounting that they may get a broader view of the field in which they can become able to provide for its nest. The bird mounts toward heaven, but it always keeps its eye upon the earth.

INFORMATION WANTED.

Chief Graham has received the following description of Lewis Clark, killed at Ecelets, Minn., which we gladly publish, with the expectation that some relative hereabouts will notice it.

"Lewis Clark had eyes of hazel color, regular features, sandy complexion and hair, sandy moustache, weight about 175 lbs, about 5 ft. 8 in. tall, has tattooing with blue ink, on left hand an anchor, on right hand a star. He always destroyed all letters and papers. The only clue we have is that he lived in Wright, Minn., three or four years, and from the postmaster I learn he has $200 in some bank near Napanee, and also owns a house and lot near there. He also has a brother-in-law near Napanee. He generally worked in the woods, and was driving a steam at time of accident for a liveryman at Virginia. Had worked four days for him. Virginia is four miles from Ecelets.

Yours,
J. J. GLEASON."

A MOTTO IN YOUR HOME.

We wish the phrase, "When you get it at Hooper's, it's good," to become familiar to every member of the home. If there ever was a day when people appreciated good goods it is to-day. We make it a business policy to keep the best of everything in our line. The Medical Hall
Fred. L. Hooper.

OPENING OF TRINITY CHURCH.

The dedicatory services of the new Methodist church are announced to take place on Sunday, March 10th, and the Monday following.

On the morning of the 10th the dedication service will take place. The Rev. John Potts, D.D., LL.D., Secretary of Education, will preach both morning and evening. He will be assisted in the ceremony of dedication by the Rev. Richard Duke, Chairman of the District, and others. The new building will doubtless be taxed to its utmost capacity.

In the afternoon at 2.45 the Sunday school will assemble in its new quarters and a most excellent programme has been arranged. The management has been singularly fortunate in securing the services of Mr. William Johnson, of Belleville, a man of continental fame as one of the leading Sunday school men of the age. Orchestral music will form a delightful feature of the school service in the afternoon.

The ushers of the new edifice will need all their skill and adaptability in seating the congregation which will again face the great preacher in the evening as not only Methodism but all shades of christian thought have been manifesting peculiar interest in the construction of this building, and the scene will be doubtless a fascinating spectacle as the vast dome flashes into light under its new scheme of illumination.

On Monday a welcome will be extended to all who are able to be present at the banquet to be given by the Ladies' Aid Society as a prelude to the address to be given in the evening by Dr. Potts.

THE BACKACHE STAGE may be just the incipient form of kidney disease which, if neglected, will develop into Bright's disease or diabetes. Doan's Kidney Pills cure backache in all its stages. Cure stops the ache in six hours and cures. Sold by T. B. Wallace.

The Carnival.

One of the best carnivals that has taken place in Napanee for many years was held last Thursday evening on the skating rink. The maskers numbered about 100, the costumes were novel and well represented, and they made a gay and bright appearance on the ice. The night was fair and the attendance was good. The Napanee band furnished excellent music. The prize winners were: Bo Peep, Miss Shaver, won the special prize of Dolly Varden shoes, presented by F. Curry; "A French Cavalier, Mr. Beale, gent's prize; Minnehaha, Jessie Ward, girl's prize; Mohawk Chief, Charles Fitzpatrick, boy's prize. Judges, R. Hartley, Peterboro, and G. Graham, Oshawa.

The Day-light Store

Proof of the pudding—the eating! Proof of an advertisement (this one for instance)—the goods! They must in actual possession, wear, or use, fulfill all promises made. That's proof of quality! Our merchandise meets that test. If not there's been an unlooked-for mistake; soon rectified; no splitting hairs; all's done cheerfully. Now proof of low prices! Ours? The test: a visit to other stores; goods will be found higher-priced elsewhere. That's been our record since we first rocked the cradle of our now full-grown business. That's why we grow; grow every day. That's why a narrow modest corner store has expanded TO A FULL BLOCK. The best goods; the lowest prices. Apply the test; we challenge it.

P.S. It isn't wise to recommend one department over another. Each in its own way is important. Each has something special to offer. But if to-day we were advising friends to look up something special we should suggest that they see the large quantities of little things at little prices at the Notion Section, which are announced on this page.

Trinity Church

On Sunday and Monday, 10th and 11th March, the Dedicatory services of the new Methodist church in this town will be conducted. The church has long been the most prominent mark of local interest as step by step it has advanced to its state of present beauty. It replaces the old stone church, which well and truly served its day, and which will ever linger a fragrant memory in the minds of the people who formed its congregation, but the old order has changed and given place to the new, and everywhere is undivided that the new is better.

The church is to be known by the name of Trinity church. It is a new departure in building, although the materials in its construction is as old as the pyramids themselves.

Structed of cement blocks but differs from other cement buildings in that the blocks are broken stone, and display a great deal of ornamental work in window arches and belts also in the construction of the towers. The church has a frontage of 90 feet on Bridge st., and 140 feet on John st. It combines the beauties of several models of modern church architecture, and yet is no example of any one, but a thorough study to date modern church.

The main entrance to the church is through a corner porch which projects off to right of the front, and has also an entrance on Bridge st. to the main tower. Entering the church by the new departure in the way of church doors at once arrests the attention. In lieu of the heavy and cumbersome doors usually met with heavily and attractive doors of bevelled plate glass provide entrance and exit, the effect of a hearty welcome to those who come.

Entirely unbroken by pillars or other obstructions the eye at once rests upon the magnificent dome and its graceful arches studded with sunburst electric lights. The seating is of rich golden oak and contrasts beautifully with the cream walls. Handsome and panel work around the church and the floor is of hardwood pattern.

A partition running well right the church is situated at will to throw into the Sunday school.

The school room is the most modern in every detail of its kind. Numerous class rooms are conveniently placed around the room and in the gallery, while the platform is large enough to seat the choir and teachers for the accomplishment of the Primary Department being especially provided for.

The windows are most beautiful in design, being of cathedral tinting, whilst the memorial windows emit the soft glow of light as it passes through them.

We shall join heartily in congratulating the trustees of the church on the completion of the enterprises with which their names will be associated, Mr. H. Dillon, of Brockville, who has superintended the construction of the church has enjoyed in having the advantage of the skill and experience of the gentlemen, who have devoted so much time and energy in the interests of the work. The interests of the church could not be in the hands of a first class body of skilled mechanics as it was made plain by the way the work was carried out. The Dedicatory services will be conducted by the Rev. Dr. Potts, President of the Bay of Quinte Conference, Rev. J. J. Ray.

THE NEW SPRING SHIRT WAIST.

Dressy shoulder characterize the first of the spring shirt-waists. The smartest designs for a linen shirt-waist is made with three deep plaits on each shoulder, back and front, and the tuck the plaits taper towards the waist. The pattern provides for a high band turn-down collar, but the waist is also finished with a neck band so that it may be worn with a stiff linen collar if preferred. The plaited shirt-waist sleeve is used, finished with a deep cuff. The fullness at the waist is in the front through the [illegible] tucks, and the back is gathered and the broad shoulder line [illegible] and an all over tucked [illegible]. Though the spring shirt-waist will be more in vogue than ever, yet the tailor-made linen waist will also be much worn.

THE ABUSE OF MEDICINE IN THE NURSERY.

Tis only medicine that a mother should give on her own responsibility is castor oil, says Emmyla L. Chesley, M.D. If mothers and even many physicians would learn that the little stomachs of babies and young children may be successfully treated by proper attention in the food and a few external applications, the mortality among infants would be greatly reduced. The digestive organs of young children are very delicate and the more one uses of medicine it is difficult to set things right again. Let a baby have fresh air, and regret trying to manufacture stored abnormal appetites. Don't give it soothing syrups, or dosing with remedies suggested by the ignorance of well-meaning friends.—The Delineator for March.

Rheumatism Cured

Do you know why you are suffering with Rheumatism? Because your kidneys are sick. They are too weak to filter uric acid from the blood. This acid is poisoning your system, and inflaming every nerve in your body. Those excruciating pains in hands, shoulders, back, knees and feet—are the result of kidney trouble. Stop the uric acid from poisoning the blood and there will be no Rheumatism.

GIN PILLS

cure Rheumatism because they cure the kidneys. They replace diseased with vigorous, healthy tissue—strengthen the organs—neutralize uric acid—and insure the blood being pure and rich.

Try GIN PILLS on our positive guarantee that they must cure you or money refunded. 50c. a box—6 for $2.50. At all dealers or from

Find Out Whether You have KIDNEY Trouble.

Almost every case of Bright's Disease could have been prevented by taking "Bu-Ju" in the earliest stages. The Kidneys became weakened—there was Rheumatism—pains in the back and chest, stiff neck, neuralgia, swollen hands and feet—yet no attention was paid to these danger signals until it was too late.

Kidney Disease is so insidnous and gradual in its progress that one is too apt to disregard these signs of defective Kidneys, and attribute it to "feeling a little out of sorts."

Are YOU sure that YOUR Kidneys are well and strong? Make this simple test:

Bu-Ju

Collect the morning urine in a vessel or glass and allow it to stand for its hours.

When your Kidneys are healthy your urine should remain perfectly clear; but if the Kidneys are affected in any way, the urine on standing may throw down a brick dust deposit of a reddish color, or it may become milky or cloudy. Sometimes there will be shreds or particles floating around in it. If any of these conditions are present, DO NOT DELAY, but commence taking "Bu-Ju" at once.

If there is the slightest indication of Kidney Trouble, take the one remedy that will cure you—"Bu-Ju." Steady treatment with these Pills will give new strength and vitality to the Kidneys—neutralize uric acid—and so tone up the Kidneys that they will do their full share of the work.

"Bu-Ju" is guaranteed to cure or money refunded. At Druggists, or sent on receipt of price, 50c.

Weak Women

To weak and ailing women, there is at least one way to help. But, with their way, two treatments must be established. One is local, one is constitutional, but both are important, both essential. Dr. Shoop's Night Cure is for the local. Dr. Shoop's Restorative, the Constitutional. The former—Dr. Shoop's Night Cure—has instant success in membrane suppository remedy, while Dr. Shoop's Restorative is wholly an internal treatment. The Restorative invigorates throughout the entire system, seeking the repair of all nerve, all tissue, and all blood ailments.

The "Night Cure", as its name implies, does its work while you sleep. It soothes sore and inflamed mucous surfaces, heals local weaknesses and discharges, while the Restorative, once nerves are enthroned, gives renewed vigor and ambition, builds up wasted tissues, bringing about renewed strength, vigor, and energy. Take Dr. Shoop's Restorative—Tablets or Liquid—as a general tonic to the system. For positive local help, use as well

BY A. CONAN DOYLE.

Author of "The Green Flag" and "The Great Boer War."

The German was sent for, but professed to know nothing of the matter, nor could any inquiry clear it up. Another item had been added to that constant and apparently purposeless series of small mysteries which had succeeded each other so rapidly, flecting aside the whole grim story of Sir Charles's death, we had a line of inexplicable incidents all within the limits of two days, which included the receipts of the printed letter, the black-bearded spy in the hansom, the loss of the new brown boot, the loss of the old black boot, and now the return of the new brown boot. Holmes sat in silence in the cab as we drove back to Baker-Street, and I knew from his drawn brows and keen face that his mind, like my own, was busy in endeavoring to frame some scheme into which all these strange and apparently disconnected episodes could be fitted. All afternoon and late into the evening he sat lost in tobacco and thought.

Just before dinner two telegrams were handed in. The first ran:—

"Have just heard that Barrymore is at the Hall.—Baskerville." The second:—

"Visited twenty-three hotels as directed, but sorry to report unable to trace cut sheet of Times.—Cartwright."

"There go two of my threads, Watson. There is nothing more unsatisfying than a case where everything goes against you. We must cast round and spin a fresh skein."

"We have still the cabman who drove the spy."

"Exactly. I have wired to get his name and address from the Official Registry. I should not be surprised if this were an answer to my question."

He rang the bell and presently to the waiter who came in answer to my questions.

"Well, I've had a good day and no mistake," said the cabman, with a grin. "What was it you wanted to ask, sir?"

"First of all my name and address, in case I want you again."

"John Clayton, Turpey Street, the Borough. My cab is out of Shipley's Yard, near Waterloo Station."

Sherlock Holmes made a note of it.

"Now, Clayton, tell me all about the fare who came and waited in this house at ten o'clock this morning and afterwards followed the two gentlemen down Regent Street."

The man looked surprised and a little embarrassed. "Why, there's no good my telling you things, for you seem to know as much as I do already," said he. "The truth is that the gentleman told me that he was a detective and that I was to say nothing about him to anyone.

"My good fellow, this is a very serious business, and you may find yourself in a pretty bad position if you try to hide anything from me. You say that your fare told you that he was a detective?"

"Yes, he did."

"When did he say this?"

"When he left me."

"Did he say anything more?"

"He mentioned his name."

Holmes cast a swift glance of triumph at me. "Oh, he mentioned his name, did he? That was imprudent. What was the name that he mentioned?"

"His name," said the cabman, "was Mr. Sherlock Holmes."

Never have I seen my friend more completely taken aback than by the cabman's reply. For an instant he sat in silent amazement. Then he burst into a hearty laugh.

"A touch, Watson—an undeniable touch!" said he. "I feel a foil as quick and supple as my own. He got home on me that time. So his name was Sherlock Holmes, was it?"

"Yes, sir, that was the gentleman's name."

"Excellent! Tell me where you picked him up and all that occurred."

"He hailed me at half-past nine in Trafalgar Square. He said that he was a detective, and he offered me two guineas if I would do exactly what he wanted all day and ask no questions. I was glad enough to agree. First we drove down to the Northumberland Hotel and waited there until two gentlemen came out and got into a hansom from the rank. We followed their cab until it pulled up somewhere near here."

"This very door," said Holmes.

"Well, I couldn't be sure of that, but I dare say my fare knew all about it. We pulled up half-way down the street and waited an hour and a half. Then the two gentlemen passed us, walking, and we followed down Baker Street and along—"

"I know," said Holmes.

"Until we got three-quarters down Regent Street. Then my gentleman threw up the trap, and he cried that I should drive right away to the Atlas Station as hard as I could go. I whipped up the mare and we were there under the ten minutes. Then he paid up his two guineas, like a good one, and off he went into the station. Only just as he was leaving he turned round and he said: 'It might interest you to know that you have been driving Mr. Sherlock Holmes.' That's how I come to know the name."

"I see. And you saw no more of him?"

"Not after he went into the station."

"And how would you describe Mr. Sherlock Holmes.

The cabman scratched his head. "Well, he wasn't altogether such an easy gentleman to describe. I'd put him at forty years of age, and he was of middle height, two or three inches shorter than you, sir. He was dressed like a toff, and he had a black beard, cut square at the end, and a pale face. I don't know as I could say more than that."

"Color of his eyes?"

"No, I can't say that."

"Nothing more that you can remember?"

"No, sir; nothing."

"Well, then, here is your half-sovereign. You've earned it. Good-night!"

"Good-night, sir, and thank you!" John Clayton turned on his heel and Holmes turned to me with a twinkling of the eyebrows and a rueful smile.

"There goes our third thread, and we are back where we started. Here is the first half-sovereign which I have earned dishonestly. I should have expected that Baskerville had consulted me, spotted who I was in Regent Street, conjectured that I had got the cabman to dog him, and sent my hansom cab on the driver, and so on back into the darkness. However, I'll tell you, Watson, this time we have got a foeman who is worthy of our steel. I've had one or two tussles in my time, but I can only wish you better luck in Devonshire. But I'm sadly sorry in my mind about it."

"About what?"

"About sending you. It's an ugly business, Watson, an ugly, dangerous business, and the more I see of it the less I like it. Yes, my dear fellow, you may laugh, but I give you my word that I shall be very glad to get back safe and sound in Baker Street once more."

CHAPTER VI.

Sir Henry Baskerville and Dr. Mortimer were ready upon the appointed day, and we started as arranged for Devonshire. Mr. Sherlock Holmes drove with me to the station and gave me his last parting injunctions and advice.

"I will not bias your mind by suggesting theories or suspicions, my son," said he; "I wish you simply to report facts in the fullest possible manner to me, and you can leave me to do the theorizing."

"What sort of facts?" I asked.

"Anything which may seem to have a bearing however indirect upon the case, and especially the relations between young Baskerville and his neighbors or any fresh particulars concerning the death of Sir Charles. I have made some inquiries myself in the last few days, but the results have, I fear, been negative. One thing only appears to be certain, and that is that Mr. James Desmond, who is the next heir, is an elderly gentleman of a very amiable disposition, so that this persecution does not arise from him. I really think that we may eliminate him entirely from our calculations. There remain the people who will actually surround Sir Henry Baskerville upon the moor."

"Would it not be well in the first place to get rid of this Barrymore couple?"

"By no means. You could not make a greater mistake. If they are innocent it would be a cruel injustice, and if they are guilty we should be giving up all chance of bringing it home to them. No, no, we will preserve them upon our list of suspects. Then there is Stapleton, the brother. I am not sure there is not something even more deserving of attention in connection with him than his sister. There remain the people who will actually surround Sir Henry Baskerville upon the moor."

"Would it not be well in the first place to get rid of this Barrymore couple?"

"By no means. You could not make a greater mistake. If they are innocent it would be a cruel injustice, and if they are guilty we should be giving up all chance of bringing it home to them. No, no, we will preserve them upon our list of suspects. Then there is Stapleton, the brother. I am not sure there is not something even more deserving of attention in connection with him than his sister. There remain the people who will actually surround Sir Henry Baskerville upon the moor."

"Will it be safe?"

"We must take our chance of that."

"But surely in London—"

"Our best course is to act openly. Depend upon it, my friend, that my brother Mycroft's hand will be there as well as our own. Every man upon the moor will be assisted to the utmost. Sir Henry Baskerville will be quite safe upon that. I should be much surprised if we have not laid hands upon the criminal before we have been three days upon the moor."

"I wish that I were sure of it. At all events I am armed, and my friend here is not a bad man in a tight place. But what is this?"

The train had begun to slow as we approached a station. A tall, handsome man had sprung to his feet in the adjoining carriage and was standing in the doorway. He had jumped out before we came to a halt, and I recognized him instantly as the convict whom we had seen upon the moor. Behind us lay the stretch of open moorland, broken only by the frowning heads of a few hills. Nowhere was there sign of human habitation. The man hesitated for an instant as he saw that we were observing him, and then with a quick spring he cleared the railway fence and disappeared over the wide expanse of the moor.

"Well, well!" said Holmes, "this is certainly our lucky day. Hullo, Watson, what's the matter?"

"Your luck rather than mine."

"Nonsense! He could not have known that we intended to get out here. Even if he did, why should he take to his heels directly we stop? He must have thought that we were policemen sent down to take him back. Why, you don't mean to tell me that you are the first to run away when there is real work to be done?"

"Except yesterday afternoon. I usually give up one day to pure amusement when I come to town, so I spent it at the Museum of the College of Surgeons."

"And I went to look at the folk in the park," said Baskerville. "But, we have lost our third thread, Holmes."

"It was imprudent, all the same," said Holmes, shaking his head and looking very grave. "I beg, Sir Henry-that you will not go about alone. Your presence seems to be well suited to draw. Did you get your other boot?"

"No, sir, it is gone for ever."

"Indeed. That is very interesting. Well, good-bye," he added, as the train began to glide down the platform. "Bear in mind, Sir Henry, one thing about this affair, that the longest hour of darkness when the powers of evil are exalted."

I looked back at the platform when we had left it far behind, and saw the tall, gaunt figure of the convict still standing motionless and gazing after us.

"The journey was a swift and pleasant one, during which Sir Henry made the more intimate acquaintance of my two companions and in playing with Dr. Mortimer's excellent spaniel. Soon, however, the brown earth and budding trees gave place to the grey stone and gaunt lines of a Devonshire landscape. Even the opening buds of spring could not lend a touch of beauty to that desolate countryside, and the marshy fields past which we rattled were full to my mind of a depressing melancholy. Even Sir Henry, who had hardly shown any sign of emotion during the journey, fell silent and gazed moodily out of the window. Our new companion, Dr. Mortimer, was the first to break the spell.

"You have been long enough in London to see the principal sights, Sir Henry, but I dare say there are a good many things to see in Devonshire. By the way, Baskerville had consulted me, spotted who I was in Regent Street, conjectured that I had got the cabman to dog him, and sent my hansom cab on the driver, and so on back into the darkness. However, I'll tell you, Watson, this time we have got a foeman who is worthy of our steel. I've had one or two tussles in my time, but I can only wish you better luck in Devonshire. CHAPTER VI.

Sir Henry Baskerville and Dr. Mortimer were ready upon the appointed day, and we started as arranged for Devonshire. Mr. Sherlock Holmes drove with me to the station and gave me his last parting injunctions and advice.

"I will not bias your mind by suggesting theories or suspicions, my son," said he; "I wish you simply to report facts in the fullest possible manner to me, and you can leave me to do the theorizing."

"What sort of facts?" I asked.

"Anything which may seem to have a bearing however indirect upon the case, and especially the relations between young Baskerville and his neighbors or any fresh particulars concerning the death of Sir Charles. I have made some inquiries myself in the last few days, but the results have, I fear, been negative. One thing only appears to be certain, and that is that Mr. James Desmond, who is the next heir, is an elderly gentleman of a very amiable disposition, so that this persecution does not arise from him. I really think that we may eliminate him entirely from our calculations

PAUL'S HAPPY EXPERIENCE

Could Do Nothing Else Than Preach the Gospel Because He Had the Divine Call and Determined to Follow It—Consciousness of This Call Will Impel All Who Receive It to Preach Christ.

Entered upon the 1st of February, 1907, at Los Angeles, the year 1907, by Frederick Dixon, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Feb. 26.—The preacher given in this sermon an ideal of a consecration to the work of preaching the gospel and of the obligations arising from a consciousness of a divine call. The text is I Corinthians, 16, "Woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel."

In the Pitti palace of Florence is a wonderful picture, supposed to have been painted by Michael Angelo, called the "Three Fates." There sit in the three sisters of mythological fame—Clotho, spinning the thread of life; Lachesis, holding the thread of life, and Atropos, with her long, sharp shears, cutting the thread of life. It is thought that when Michael Angelo painted this picture he used the same model for all the three faces. Whether that is true we know not, but one fact about this picture we know—it is a most impressive and suggestive picture. The artist has depicted these women at their daily tasks, going on in their work serenely, remorselessly and absolutely independent of all outside influences by which they may be surrounded. When you watch those three faces you involuntarily say: "Yes, I can understand how men who did not recognize God's hand in the government of the world may have said as they looked at this picture, 'The fates are ruling our lives. They meet us at the cradle. They guide us through childhood's hours. They grow for us the orange blossoms of the marriage altar. They lower the bier of the dear fields of usefulness in which we are to labor. They plant the trees out of which our coffins are to be made. If we heed their commandments, we shall do our work well. If we turn a deaf ear to their behests, then unutterable misfortune and failure will be ours.' There the fates sit, spinning out thread of life, holding our thread of life, and with their long shears cutting the thread of life at the brink of the grave.'" Thus men have had the overarching influence of life about them, and they believed they would never get away from the place of the life those fates had made for them.

Sometimes men under this belief tried to avoid their mission in life, just as men in our day sometimes try to evade the duty to which God has called them. But whenever they do so these men are unhappy in their sins and do not make the most out of their lives. They are like the late Henry S. Priest, the beloved Latin professor of Michigan university. God never meant him to be a Latin professor. He was born to be a musician. All his desires seemed to call out, "Let me linger by the piano keys." But President Andrew D. White once said of him: "Though he has been my good fortune to hear all the leading pianists of my time, I have never heard one who seemed to interpret the masterpieces more worthily. I have always insisted that had he lived in Germany he would have been a second Beethoven. So passionately was he devoted to music that at times he sent his piano away from his house in order to shun temptations to abridge the ministerial work." We find men like Henry Simmons Frieze in every department of life. They are like John Tyndall, who tried to be a civil engineer when he was meant to be a physicist. They are like Matthew Sinipson, who wished to be a physician when God intended him to be a minister. They are like Judge Russell Lowell and Walter Scott, trying to be lawyers when God made them to be poets and literary men. Happy, thrice happy, are the men who follow the inward tendencies of their minds and hearts to develop long the lines by which they were born and for which God equipped them.

Now, Paul in the words of my text is glorying in the fact that he has consecrated his brain and body and soul to the work to which God intended him to do. He seems to say in this chapter: "Some people think I have sacrificed my joy and pleasure when I gave up my life to gospel preaching. Why, sirs, I could do nothing in life if I tried. My greatest enjoyment in life is mine in found outside of the gospel ministry, but inside. Why, sirs, if I were not allowed to preach Jesus Christ I would be the most miserable of all men." Then he says: "Woe is unto me if I preach the joy gospel of Jesus Christ." I want to show you that Paul was one of the happiest men because he was allowed to be a missionary of Jesus Christ and that he would have been one of the most miserable of men had he not surrendered all Paul, Christ-possessed, mind and soul—to be a flaming evangelist of the cross.

Paul had an absorbing passion to preach the gospel because, in the first place, he had a revelation of the divine personality of Jesus Christ. He could never get away from his Damascus road experience. He had met the Christ touch. He had stood face to face with Jesus. He had seen Jesus. He had talked to Jesus. He had heard Jesus talk to him. No sooner did this divine revelation come than there sprang up in him a longing desire to go forth and tell to the world what he had seen and hear his Christ could become the world's Saviour. Paul's Damascus experience was like that which some of us have had during our past lives. It may have been during some revival service in the village church of our boyhood days or it may have been during a season of awful sickness or when we buried a little child or during the hours which we were yielding to a heinous sin that Christ appeared unto us. We can remember it as yesterday. Jesus rose up before us as he came to Paul, saying, "I am Jesus whom thou hast persecuted." And so realistic was the divine revelation that no argument could ever prove to us that Jesus Christ was not as near unto us as he appeared unto Paul on the Damascus road.

Nor is Paul the only man who has had this revelation of Jesus Christ. Scores and scores of eminent Christians have had it. Luther had it, and Wesley had it, and Finney had it, and Thomas Chalmers had it, and John Bunyan had it, and John Newton had it. They have had it in the same way many of us have had it. The greatest trouble with many of us in Christian work is that we are not obedient to the heavenly vision. We do not say with Paul, "God, forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of Jesus Christ." We are trying to teach men lessons for this life, but we do not emphasize and keep re-emphasizing the essential doctrine that through the blood of Jesus and in no other way can we be truly cleansed of our sins. We have had this revelation come to us, but we have been pushing it more and more out of the foreground of our lives.

A young minister once said to Mr. Moody: "What makes the difference between your success and mine? Either you are right and I am wrong, or I am right and you are wrong. Well," said Mr. Moody, "I do not know what is the difference unless you tell me, for I have never heard you preach." The minister replied: "You make a great deal out of the death of Jesus." "Well, said Mr. Moody, "what do you do with this: 'He hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows?' What do you do with this: 'He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities, and with his stripes were we healed?' What do you do with this: 'Without shedding of blood there is no remission?'" "Oh," answered the minister, "I do not preach on those passages." "What do you preach?" "Well," he answered, "my sermons are moral essays." Then Mr. Moody replied, "My friend, if you have been a son of Belial it is all a myth to me." "Why?" answered the man, "I think that the doctrine is untrue." Then said Mr. Moody, "I advise you to get out of the ministry very quick, for I would not preach a sham. If the Bible is untrue, let us stop preaching and come out at once and tell the truth. But if these things are true, and Jesus left heaven and came into the world to save sinners, then let us lay hold of it and preach it in season and out of season." So say all true ministers of Jesus Christ.

But Paul's full answer fact besides that revelation on the Damascus road which was driving Paul forward as a minister of Jesus Christ. All men who are converted to Jesus Christ are not called to enter theological seminaries. There is a fitness in all things. Many a good cobbler has been spoiled to make a poor preacher. Many a men who wear the black cloth of the clergy would make a far better successful builder or a very good farmer if they do in expounding the word of God from a pulpit. I think a very great deal of sympathy with that shrewd father who when his son came to him and said: "Father, I feel a divine revelation last night. God wants me to be a minister of Jesus Christ," answered: "Well, my son, I want to show you that I have two letters bearing at me—P. C. and P. C. One of them stands for 'preach Christ,' and the other for 'plough corn.' God meant you to plough corn. He never put you out to be a minister."

There is no profession, as I well know, about which so many mistakes are made as about the ministry. Young men, full of zeal, full of the desire to save souls, full of ambition to serve God, all of which aspirations are laudable, rush into the ministry without considering whether they have the talents needed for success in that sphere. Many a man who would have made an excellent lawyer, or physician or politician or business man becomes an inefficient minister, and, as a humorous professor once said, "crushes against the pulpit and stuns himself for life." But there never would have been any doubt about Paul's vocation. He had all the gifts and qualities that are needed to make a man successful in winning souls.

Paul was more than silver tongued. What he said was not more luminous or the way he said it. Jean Baptiste Massillon was the great preacher of France ever produced. The proud King Louis XIV. paid him the greatest compliment that can be given to any messenger of Jesus Christ. He said, "I have heard a great many preachers in my chapel before and was much pleased with them, but every time I hear you I go away displeased with myself." Great was the spiritual eloquence of a Massillon. But greater, far greater, was the moral power of the gospel message he brought to the French court. After his sermons had been published volume after volume was added to always keep one of the volumes on his study desk, declaring that they were the best sermons that had ever been preached the world, who had the advantage of the translations of the brilliance of the writings of the apostle. He was not only an orator, but he was also an organizer, and he established and left behind him a number of soul and soul winning workers. His qualities will be used by intelligent men for all time. Paul's consciousness of his special gifts from God, and his sense to use of means to the end, made him the great Christ of assistance of any special gifts. Woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel.

"Well," you say, "if Paul had all those characteristics I do not see how that he should want to preach the gospel. No wonder that every sinner he was not preaching Christ to some one he should feel that there was a necessity laid upon him to do so. But I am not a John Baptist Massillon. I am as dumb as a sphinx whenever I stand upon my feet before an audience."

Perhaps you are right, my friend, but

If you cannot speak like angels,
If you cannot preach like Paul,
You can tell the love of Jesus,
You can say he died for all.

Perhaps you can say this as a consecrated nurse, like Florence Nightingale. Perhaps you can talking it as a singing evangelist, like Philip Phillips or Ira D. Sankey or P. P. Bliss. Perhaps you can pray it, as did your loving, gentle, Christ-like mother. I do not know what your talent may be whether it is the tongue of a John Bunyan or of the pen of a Clay Trumbull. But one thing I know—that you have a talent, and, like Paul, you must consecrate all that talent to the service of Jesus Christ. "Woe is unto me if I do not surrender all my talents, body, mind and soul, to the spreading of the gospel."

Oh, that we all, like Paul, might be willing to surrender every talent that we have of body, mind and soul, to the service of Jesus Christ! God cannot ask of us to do any more. He has a right to ask of us to consecrate as much as that. There is a story told that many years ago a troop of German cavalry was on the march. The captain halted at the home of an old Moravian. When the door was opened he said: "Father, show me a field where I can set my soldiers a-forage. We must have food." The old man said: "All right, my friend. Follow me." So he took his staff and led the soldiers on for about a mile, and they came to a fine field of barley. "There is just the field you want," said the captain. "Let us stop here." "Have patience," answered the old man. "I will show one which will suit your purposes just as well." So he led the troops on about a quarter of a league farther until they reached another field of barley. After the soldiers had gathered the grain the captain turned to the old man and said: "Father, this will do. But the field we passed had better grain than this. Why did you bring us to this field?" "Young master," answered the man, "the other field was not mine, and this is." Beautiful! beautiful! The old Moravian did not want the soldiers to rob his neighbors, so he let them rob one of his own fields of ripened grain. But beautiful as that sacrifice was I can tell you of one more beautiful. It is the child of God taking Jesus by the hand and leading Him down upon the world saying "Here, Master. Here are my fields, take them. Here is my voice, use it. Here is my tongue, I will plead for thee. Here is my hand, let it work for thee. Here is my feet, let it run its messages for thee. All that I have is thine." That is another way of interpreting the words: "Woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel."

There is just one more thought, and then I am done. I believe that Paul was intensely and supremely consecrated to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ because of his years of wasted gospel opportunities. He was a sinner of sinners. He did not give his heart to God in his youth. For years he opposed the teachings of Jesus. He ridiculed the miracles as shams and trickeries. He may have opposed Jesus to the death when he heard of Christ's trial and crucifixion. After his conversion he was a terror in persecuting the followers of the lowly Nazarene. "Oh, I think I hear him say after his gospel conversion, "if I can only live long enough to undo some of the awful results of those persecutions! Oh, if I can only live long enough to go into those cities where I've persecuted him! My Lord and my Christ, will then not let me live long enough to testify for Him?" Mary Magdalene, woe, to unto me if I preach not the gospel." Oh, my friends, do you see her that Paul said he was the chief of sinners? Do you wonder that in every letter he wrote to the churches of Corinthians, "Woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel" after years spent in stifling the gospel invitation when at last you come to kneel at His cross, saying, "I cry out a debt of Paul: "Lord, receive me, the chief of sinners." Lord, Lord, give me an opportunity to undo the awful results of those persecutions!" Oh, if I can only live long enough to go into those cities where I've persecuted him! My Lord and my Christ, will then not let me live long enough to testify for Him?" Mary Magdalene, woe, to unto me if I preach not the gospel." Oh, my friends, do you see her that Paul said he was the chief of sinners? Do you wonder that in every letter he wrote to the churches of Corinthians, "Woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel" after years spent in stifling the gospel invitation when at last you come to kneel at His cross, saying, "I cry out a debt of Paul: "Lord, receive me, the chief of sinners." Lord, Lord, give me an opportunity to undo the awful results of those persecutions! Oh, if I can only live long enough to go into those cities where I've persecuted him! My Lord and my Christ, will then not let me live long enough to testify for Him?" Mary Magdalene, woe, to unto me if I preach not the gospel." Oh, my friends, do you see her that Paul said he was the chief of sinners? Do you wonder that in every letter he wrote to the churches of Corinthians, "Woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel" after years spent in stifling the gospel invitation when at last you come to kneel at His cross, saying, "I cry out a debt of Paul: "Lord, receive me, the chief of sinners." THE GOVERNMENT AND ZAM-BUK.

SURVEY OUT FROM FORT WILLIAM TAKES A SUPPLY OF THIS USEFUL BALM.

Kam-Book, the favorite household balm and salve, is now admitted by the Doctor's by leading parties engaged in the survey of the route of the Canadian Pacific.

Mr. Alexander Hall, writing from Fort William, Ontario, says: "Having proved beneficial in my own family, I determined to keep a supply of Zam-Buk on hand. Since then I thought it would be a most useful thing for the survey parties to carry. Mr. Wilkinson and two others left Fort William early last week, and every day it was called into requisition for some kind of injury or cuts, bruises, burns, or sores. Later on Mr. Wilkinson wrote me that Zam-Buk was the most useful thing they had taken with them, and that it had proved of great benefit to many. Zam-Buk cures not only sores, ringworm, ulcers, abscesses, eczema, blood poisoning, piles, blood poison, chronic abscesses, etc., but also relieves at once all forms of skin trouble, chilblains, and scalds. All drug stores and stores generally sell at 50c. box, or from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price.

The cattle owners living on Red Deer River have a range extending two hundred miles north, from three to four hundred miles east and west, and about forty miles south to the Red Deer River. Within the next five years companies and large and small ranchers have located in this range.

Mexican cattle have been imported with success. The only drawback existing in the sales around or near the railroads is the fear many ranchers in the river flat have that the cattle will stampede when they scent or trouble him in his business are the mosquitoes or an occasional prairie fire.

On the sixteenth of November last the storm Mr. Foster predicted came and the cattle men were in their glory. Of this year the snow lay on the level to a depth of two feet, and was driven from ten to twenty feet deep. The temperature ranged from thirty to fifty and fifty-five degrees below zero, and stayed there for weeks.

The cattle that drifted with the storm to Red Deer River, and, being owing to the fact that they had covered their backs with a thick coat of protection when winter struck them, were in splendid condition when the winter broke up partiality wandered back to their old haunts. Seventy-fifty and sixty head in the bunches were counted in the Red Deer River.

The little ranchers fare better, as a rule, than the stock, even the latter cost four year old steers; still they stand the winter in splendid condition. For six weeks those animals have to subsist on browse, principally on willows and rose bushes, which are plentiful. For the open country to travel on top land is almost impossible. The snow is packed in such a way through the snow a great deal of the time. Sometimes for days the frozen river seems preferable to the snow banks. They drive from one bend to another, gathering what cattle are found in their way, and in this way they add almost praying for the Chanook winds. Many of the ranchers have their own coal and wood and a blizzard does not interfere with their comfort.

Owing to the prairie fires, there is a scarcity of hay, and with many eleven weeks of hard winter, the owners of 1906 and 1907 the worst known for the cattle men in twenty-five years.

ADDRESS AND PRESENTATION.

A very pleasing event took place at Victoria Hall, Stella, on Thursday evening last, when Mr. David Finley was presented with a silver tea service by Burleigh L. O. L. No. 482. Mr. Finley is about to leave Amherst Island to take up his abode on the mainland near Collins Bay. He has been an Orangeman for forty-eight years and well deserves this token of esteem from his brethren. At the presentation several of the members and clergymen made short speeches, and the address was read by Mr. Fowler. The meeting closed with the singing of "He's a jolly good fellow" and "God save the King."

To David Tait Finley,

Dear Sir and Brother,—The members of Burleigh Loyal Orange Lodge, No. 482, have heard with deep regret that you and your family are about to leave Amherst Island and make your home on the mainland. We desire to take this opportunity of expressing to you the high esteem in which you are held by us all, and also our deep sense of the loss which we are about to sustain through your removal from us. Your name first appears on our roll of membership in the year eighteen hundred and fifty-nine. During the long period of forty-eight years you have maintained unbroken connection with the Orange Order and with this lodge, and are at present in this respect our senior member. You have also filled several important offices in this lodge including that of Master, with credit to yourself and to the entire satisfaction of your brethren. During all these years your conduct has been that of a true and worthy brother, commanding the respect not only of the members of this lodge but also that of the community in general.

You have further shown your confidence in Orangeism and in the great fundamental principles of civil and religious liberty for which it stands by commending it to others, your own sons included, two of whom we have now with us as active and honored members.

For these reasons and because of the high esteem in which you are held by us all on account of your sterling character and worth as a neighbor and a high-spirited citizen, we ask you to accept this Silver Service as a token of our love and Mrs. Finley's behalf, as a token of remembrance from your Amherst Island brethren, with the earnest hope that both you and your good wife and family may enjoy very much happiness and prosperity in your new home.

KILLED FALLING TIMBER.

A shocking accident happened at about 10 o'clock on Wednesday morning on Mr. John Valentine's farm, near Violet, resulting in the death of Edward Bonter, aged 20 years, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Sweet, Morven. Edward and his twin brother Fred were engaged falling timber for Mr. Fred. A. Perry, of Chambers. The latter had cleared away sawing down a large elm tree, and as it began to lean to the west Mr. Perry stepped back to watch it fall. A heavy wind was blowing from the north at the time which changed the direction of the fall to the south. Both Sweet boys started to run south and Mr. Perry shouted to them to run the other way. Fred. Sweet turned to the east and escaped, but his brother, being at a short distance behind him, was caught. Deceased lived about half an hour. The grief stricken parents have the sympathy of a large circle of friends in their sad bereavement. The funeral will take place this Friday afternoon at two o'clock from the parents' residence. Service at the White church, Morven.

SOMEWHAT SURPRISED.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Bell were some what surprised on Saturday evening, Feby. 23rd, when about thirty of their children and grand-children gathered at their home, carrying with them many baskets of edibles, to celebrate the evening of Mrs. Bell's eighteenth birthday. After tea being served, Mr. and Mrs. Bell were presented with a small token of family remembrance for which they appreciated very much. The rest of the evening was spent in games and other amusements until time to depart for home, when all joined in singing, "God be with you till we meet again." Mr. Samuel Bell thanked in prayer, thanking God for the many blessings He had bestowed upon them and their family through the many years that had passed and gone and asking His richest blessings upon all present. After good-byes were said all started for their homes, wishing Mr. and Mrs. Bell a prosperous and happy new year. Mr. and Mrs. Bell are eighty-four and eighty years old respectively and considering all things, they are enjoying fair good health. Their family consists of seven children, and at present writing all are still alive and enjoying good health.

— NEWBURGH.

The worst snow storm of the season struck town on Sunday last, there was not enough snow to block the roads.

The concert given in Finkle's hall on Monday evening under the auspices of the A. O. U. W. was a great success. The entertainment of the evening, Robert Wilson, of Toronto, took well with the audience and was encored each time. Miss Astley, of Napanee, made her first appearance before a Newburgh audience and was met by the applause of the crowd by her whistling and singing. All her numbers were encored and she is sure of a hearty welcome if she again takes part in a concert here. Miss Lindsey sang in her usual pleasing manner. Mr. F. D. Moore, our popular tenor, sang "Sweethearts of the Road" as his solo, and took the house by storm when he sang as an encore a parody on that "Ireland song" by Chauncy Weaver, in which the game of ball the Newburgh and Yarker teams played at Napanee last September figured. Mr. Joseph Gibson, of Ingersoll, was present and gave an address. Miss Beaman was an excellent accompanist for Mr. Wilson. Miss Ashley, Miss Lambert and Miss Wood played for Mr. Moore. Mr. R. W. Longmore occupied the chair. The proceeds were in the neighborhood of $6.00.

Miss Annie Beaman is home for a visit with her parents, Dr. and Mrs. M. I. Beaman.

Miss Bird Hinch spent Sunday at Dr. Beaman's.

Miss Helen Finkle spent last week with friends in Kingston.

Mrs. Corlette spent a few days last week with her brother, C. H. Finkle.

Miss Maude Beaman is visiting friends in Yarker.

Miss Pearl Patterson took in the carnival at Napanee on Tuesday evening.

Fifty-five new books were placed in the Public Library last week. These books are in the shape of a travelling library loaned by the government for three months. The public will do well to join at once and take advantage of this opportunity.

Mr. F. C. Miller, the popular Classical and Modern Master of the High school, has tendered his resignation to accept a position in the High school of Quebec, at a largely increased salary. During the few years Mr. Miller has been here he has made a host of friends who will be sorry to see him leave, yet glad to hear of his promotion. He has ever been a thorough teacher, well read in his subjects, always ready to help his pupils, and has held the confidence and esteem of the large number of students with whom he came in contact. Mr. Miller has been prominently identified with the Public Library here and had done much to put that institution on a sound basis. We sincerely hope that the greatest success will ever follow Mr. Miller, and that in his new position he may find friends as true and surroundings as congenial as those he leaves in Newburgh.

The Board of Education met on Saturday evening and accepted Mr. Miller's resignation and set on foot measures to engage a Modern teacher.

The Board of Education met on Tuesday evening to engage a teacher to succeed Mr. Noakes, as Principal of the High School. There were four applicants for the position, viz., Mr. J. M. Denyes, of Whitby; Mr. Weatherup, of Williamstown; Mr. Bayens, of Baltimore, Ont., and Mr. Burwash, of Forest, Ont. After the Board had had the applications read and the testimonials of the last three applicants, Mr. John S. Patterson rose and said, "Mr. Chairman, I take great pleasure in moving that the application of Mr. Denyes be accepted. We all know Mr. Denyes, know what an excellent teacher he is, how at a fine man he is, and I believe he will be a drawing card to the school. We want a man who will attract the students of the rural sections to Newburgh." Mr. Plugert seconded the motion, and by a unanimous vote of the Board, Mr. J. M. Denyes, who a few years ago taught successfully in our High School, was appointed Principal. There were forty-four votes in the boxes at the High school present, as well as a number of citizens, and when the vote was taken, which elected Mr. Denyes, the applause which broke out from the students present showed the Board that their choice was a popular one. Should the appointment be confirmed by the public, he will be very popular in the village for the new Principal is well liked during the time he taught here. Mr. Denyes' many friends in the Village are greatly delighted over his appointment, and we feel sure that the old Academy will well sustain its reputation as an educational institution under the new Principal, and that under his guidance and direction the "Old Rank Pink" will steadily advance in the good and great work it is doing. We wish the new Principal every success and feel sure that the loyalty and esteem which the students gave Mr. Pentel will so cheerfully be given to Mr. Denyes.

Mr. Pentel Bryan left on Monday morning for New York, where he has secured an excellent position.

A large number from the village attended the very successful dance in Lockwood's Hall, on Friday evening, March 1st.

SIR GILBERT PARKER
The Greatest Canadian Novelist.

A tall, well-built man, with dark hair, closely trimmed beard, calm, observant eyes, gentle, and with the ease and polish of a fine stock intensified by the culture of the famous city of Quebec he was born in 1862, the son ofgh officer in the Royal Artillery and the descendant of many generations of fighting men. It seemed natural that he, too, should won the cannon, but he had his eye on the quieter and less exciting life for the church. He was ordained a deacon but his train of thought was switched off the clerical track when he began to lecture on English literature at Trinity College, Toronto.

In 1886 he went to Australia for his health, and as one of the editors of the "Sydney Herald" had a roving commission to study the South Sea Islands and the dark continent of the Hudson Bay country. They were fresh, crisp, vigorous and virile tales; the field was new, the treatment masterly, the character drawing a cold-water plunge. They had the same note of earnest, the same unquestioned revelation of the coming of a great writer, that marked the début of Kipling in his native India. Most authors have a special sentimental fondness for their first-born, but Sir Gilbert bought back and destroyed his first novel "The Chief Factor," after more than fifty thousand copies had been sold. Of his twenty other books, perhaps "The Right of Way" has inspired most discussion and added most to his prestige and popularity.

This famous novelist, journalist, lecturer, poet, dramatist and member of Parliament, lives in the Gothic heraldic seclusion of Carlton House Terrace, a short street closed at one end, so that the rumble of traffic comes only like the surge of the sea heard at a distance. In a study on the fourth floor Sir Gilbert writes, blandly gives new point, ease and dignity to others. Simple, strong and unaffected, Sir Gilbert carries with an increase and grace the honors he so justly won.

Entered according to A.D. of the Parliament of Canada, in the year 1907, by W. C. Wick, at the Department at Ottawa.

Give Fair Play to

A really reliable remedy for headache —Zutoo.

If you have got it into your head that Zutoo Tablets will hurt you, you are mistaken.

It isn't fair to us to you to judge Zutoo by the drug cures.

It isn't fair to yourself to suffer from headache, when this really harmless vegetable headache cure is within your reach.

The fair thing for both of us is—to judge Zutoo on its merits—to test it.

If you find it does not cure your headache, sick, nervous feelings, in fifty minutes, and leave you feeling good every time—we had after effects, just discard it.

But do not condemn it unfairly without a trial, and keep on suffering from headaches. You really do not have to, and one trial of Zutoo will prove it.

All we ask for Zutoo is fair play—that you give it a trial before concluding as to its merits or demerits.

Wont you do this? You'll be glad ever after if you do.

We'll send trial tablets for nothing, or you can buy them at dealers in 10c. and 25c. packages.

A Specialist's Prescription for women

Who Feel Tired and Run-Down.

A Remedy that Gives New Life and Vigor and makes Women Feel Good.

Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women are the prescription of a specialist.

We don't say that no other living physician could prescribe so good a remedy for women. But we do say this. The ordinary practising physician cannot prescribe so good a one, and no living physician can prescribe a better one.

Dr. Hugo put into the prescription all the knowledge, experience and skill which he had acquired in forty years' practice as a specialist in women's diseases, and included as well the discoveries of all other great physicians.

All that is latest in medicine—all that has been found useful to women, is contained in them. Nothing useful has been included. Nothing useful has been left out.

The result is, that every requirement of the female system in any possible condition is met by them.

And this fact has been certified to by leading physicians and chemists on this continent, to whom Dr. Hugo's prescription was submitted.

If you are in a run-down condition and don't feel as well as you would like to, or suffer from any symptoms of female laxity, or weakness peculiar to your sex, avail yourself at once of the prescription of this great and good physician.

The cost of 72 tablets, enough for an extended treatment, is only 50c.

Mr. Frank Miller, that some wag has taken it into their noddle to write a few items for Mount Pleasant under the assumed name of "Gravel Road," Tisdale were not honest enough to come out and give it the proper name, but chose the cowardly method of writing on another's rights. From a residential point of view I think their conduct leaves considerable of the selfish to say the least of it, seeing their place of abode is not with the Mount Pleasant people, but with the Gravel Road to almost without a limit. In conclusion I will say I am not the regular correspondent of Mount Pleasant does not for the immediate present intend relinquishing their efforts as a correspondent, and will kindly ask them to confine their writings in the future to their own place of residence for when I've forsaken the pen, it will be the time enough for them to take it up. A word to the wise is sufficient.

OBITUARY.

THOMAS KENNY.

An old and respected resident of Stoneytown, living on the York Road, two miles east of Odessa, has been gathered to the great beyond, in the person of Thomas Kenny. In 1843, Mr. Kenny left his native county of Ireland with his parents. The family settled in Kingston, Ont., where the manhood he followed the trades for a number of years. At Brighton he met and married Mary Healey, and in the young bride's native township of Kingston Township, where they have lived and died. Deceased was a man who was one of the pioneers in this section, and by his energy and industry, assisted in making Kingston Township what it is to-day. Those who survive him are his wife, one son, Edward, and Jessie and Mrs. A. Stagger, all of Kingston. He was a kind father, and will be missed by all who came in contact with him. He was a member of the old home. On Wednesday, Mr. Kenny was not up as usual, and called the family to commence another day's work. After breakfast he complained of a feeling of weakness, and his friends helped into bed. There he remained for short days before death claimed him as one of the ripe age of 78 years. Thomas Kenny was recognized by all as a thoroughly honest and upright man, a good neighbor, and a kind father. He was a church of England in religion and was attended to his last resting place by Rev. Mr. Dale, who also preached his funeral sermon to an immense concourse of friends and neighbors, met to pay the last tribute of respect to one who was held in high esteem.

WILBUR M. BUSH.

A young respected resident of Sharp's Corners, was one of the three who were so suddenly cut off, and buried instantaneously into eternity, within the time of a few short minutes, forgiving disposition; nothing but good could be said of him. The community will long suffer the loss of one who was ever ready to help others. He went in his work prepared to do his duties diligent, to the best of health, little thinking in such a short time he would leave his work, never to return to it again. All we can say for us is pray for us to say "Thy will be done," for God never makes any mistakes in the mysterious ways or which he calls our loved ones away. The funeral, which took place at the house, was one of the largest ever held at this community. The Forest Mills L.O.L. of which he was a member, attended in a body to the vault, where Rev. Dowdell conducted the service.

MRS. THOMAS ROACH.

Another sad death occurred at Hellmuth, Tuesday, Feby. 26th, of Mrs. Thomas Roach, youngest daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Ingrill, of that place. Mrs. Roach has been in poor health for the past two years. She developed a bad cough which settled into fever and death was a great shock to her friends. The sympathy of a large circle of friends in Napanee and vicinity is extended to the sorrowing husband and relatives in the hour of their bereavement. Besides her husband she leaves her aged parents, two brothers and four sisters. The remains were placed in Centreville vault.

THE HOUND OF THE BASKERVILLES

BY A. CONAN DOYLE.

Author of "The Green Flag" and "The Great Boer War."

The young heir glanced round with a gloomy face.

"It's just what my uncle felt as it trouble were coming on him in such a place as this," said he. "It's enough to scare any man. I'll have a row of electric lamps up here inside of six months, and you won't know it again, with a thousand candle-power Swan and Edison right here in front of the hall door."

The avenue opened into a broad expanse of turf, and the house lay before us. In the fading light I could see that the centre was a heavy block of building from which a porch projected. The whole front was draped in ivy, with a patch cloped bare here and there where a window or a coat-of-arms broke through the dark veil. From this central block rose the twin towers, ancient, crenelated, and pierced with many loopholes. To right and left of the turrets were more modern wings of black granite. A dull light shone through heavy mullioned windows, and from the high chimneys which rose from the steep roof there sprang a single black column of smoke.

"Welcome, Sir Henry! Welcome, to Baskerville Hall!"

A tall man had stepped from the shadow of the porch to open the door of the wagonette. The figure of a woman was silhouetted against the yellow light of the hall. She came out and helped the old man down our bags.

"You don't mind my driving straight home, Sir Henry?" said Dr. Mortimer. "My wife is expecting me."

"She or you will stay and have some dinner?"

"No, I must go. I shall probably find some work awaiting me. I would stay to show you over the house, but Barrymore will be a better guide than I. Good-bye, and never hesitate night or day to send for me if I can be of service."

The wheels died away down the drive while Sir Henry and I turned into the hall, and the door clanged behind us. It was a fine apartment in which we found ourselves, large, lofty, and heavily rafftered with huge balks of pre-blackened oak. In the great old-fashioned fireplace behind the high iron dogs a log-fire crackled and snapped. Sir Henry and I held out our hands to it, for we were numb from our long drive. Then we gazed round us at the high, thin window of old stained glass, the oak panelling, the stags' heads, the coat-of-arms upon the walls, all dim and sombre in the subdued light of the central lamp.

"It's just as I imagined it," said Sir Henry. "Is it not the very picture of an old family home? To think that this should be the same hall in which for five hundred years my people have lived. It strikes me solemn to think of it."

I saw his dark face lit up with a boyish enthusiasm as he gazed about him. The light beat upon him where he stood, but long shadows trailed down the walls and hung like a black canopy above him. Barrymore had returned from taking our luggage to our rooms. He stood in front of us now with the respectful manner of a well-trained servant. He was a remarkable-looking man, tall, handsome, with a square black beard, and pale, distinguished features.

"Would you wish dinner to be served at once, sir?"

"Is it ready?"

"In a very few minutes, sir. You will find hot water in your rooms. My wife and I will be happy, Sir Henry, to stay with you until you have made your fresh arrangements, but you will understand that under the new conditions this house will require a considerable staff."

"What new conditions?"

"I only meant, sir, that Sir Charles led a very retired life, and we were able to look after his wants. You would, naturally, wish to have more company, and so you will need changes in your household."

"Do you mean that your wife and you wish to leave?"

"Only when it is quite convenient to you, sir."

"But your family have been with us for several generations, I believe, then not? I should be sorry to begin my life here by breaking an old family connection."

I seem to discern some signs of emotion upon the butler's white face.

"I feel that also, sir, and so does my wife. But to tell the truth, sir, we have both very much attached to Sir Charles, and his death gave us a shock and made these surroundings very painful to us. I fear that we shall never again be easy in our minds at Baskerville Hall."

"But what do you intend to do?"

"I have no doubt, sir, that we shall succeed in establishing ourselves in some business. Sir Charles's generosity has given us the means to do so. And now, sir, perhaps I had best show you to your rooms."

A square balustraded gallery ran round the top of the old hall, approached by a double stair from this central point two long corridors extended the whole length of the building, from which all the bedrooms opened. My own was in the same wing as Baskerville's and almost next door to it. These rooms appeared to be much more modern than the central part of the house, and the bright paper and numerous candles did something to remove the sombre impression which our arrival had left upon my mind.

But the dining-room which opened out of the hall was a place of shadow and gloom. It was a long chamber with a step separating the dais where the family sat from the lower portion reserved for their dependents. At one end a minstrel's gallery overlooked it. Black beams shot across above our heads, with a smoke-darkened ceiling beyond them. With rows of flaring torches to light it up, and the color and rude affluence of an old-time banquet, it might have softened into picturesqueness; but when two black-clothed gentlemen sat down to a dinner-table that is set in a shaded lamp, one's voice became hushed and one's spirit subdued. A dim line of ancestors, in every variety of dress, from the Elizabethan knight to the buck of the Regency, stared down upon us and daunted us by their silent company. We talked little, and for me was glad when the meal was over and we were able to retire into the modern billiard-room and smoke a cigarette.

"My word, it isn't a very cheerful place," said Sir Henry. "I suppose one can't expect it to be gay and bright when one has lived all one's life in it, but our poor old uncle certainly had the blues when he came here. I'm afraid I shall have to smarten things up a bit, I suppose a man can't have a dozen servants in a house this size."

"I should have thought that you would have preferred a smaller house."

"Well, I shall change my mind as to that when I see a little more of the country. But I'll tell you frankly, Mortimer, that I don't like the place to-night, and I don't like the way my coming here affects me. It's the most natural thing in the world that a man should take a fancy to live in his own house, but I'll be shanghaied if this doesn't feel more like a prison than a home."

"I suppose you would hardly feel like that in London?"

"Perhaps not. What time is breakfast?"

"Nine o'clock, sir."

"Well, I'm going to turn in early, for I suppose I shall feel better then. Are you coming up?"

"No, I have a few papers to look through. I generally work in my room of nights. I hope that you will be able to stand it here for a few days without disturbing the household. Before you go to bed I would recommend that you close the doors of this room and of the hall, for otherwise rats are apt to come down in search of food when they have the place all to themselves."

Barrymore and I were left alone for a time in the billiard-room, while he collected the candles. He was engaged in putting out the lights when it occurred to me that I might as well have a word with him at once about the strange reports which were current in the county.

"Before you go, Barrymore," said I, "I should like to have a word with you."

He set down the candle and closed the door behind him. His face in the dim light was unusually pale.

"Is it about dinner, sir?"

"No, it is about nothing. You must have heard, Barrymore, since you have lived so long in the county, that Sir Charles's death has given rise to all sorts of rumours. Superstitious people are inclined to associate it with the legend we heard to-day. You don't suppose there is anything in it?"

He seemed relieved, and yet there was a touch of scorn in his manner.

"I can't tell what people may suppose, sir. I have heard the servants here talk freely of the matter, but you may rest assured that it is only the ignorant who do so."

"Then you think that there is nothing for which anyone need be afraid?"

"I should not think there is, sir, unless it be for the gentleman who will live here in future."

"Ah, then you have heard something of the kind yourself?"

He hesitated for a moment before answering.

"Sir Charles was very much upset during the last few days of his life, sir, and he had taken this matter seriously. I have no wish to say anything which will add to your uneasiness, but Sir Charles had certainly received a very disturbing shock."

"You mean that he had seen something?"

"He was on the point of going out to see, sir, for he had a message to that effect. But when he got as far as the door he became very much excited during the few minutes that he was waiting, and when he returned to the house I could see that he was deeply moved. I am convinced that he had gone out to meet someone whom he expected to see."

"And did not?"

"So far as I know, sir, he did not. He went straight down the avenue, but when he got beyond the trees——"

"Yes, yes, pray go on!"

"I have already said more than I should, perhaps, upon a matter which is not of my own business. But I can only say that I hope that you will not be disturbed in any way. If you should be, I should feel it my duty to step in."

"I gather that Sir Charles's last walk was down the avenue?"

"That was his habit, sir."

"I suppose you didn't see anything of him during that walk?"

"No, sir, I was given the evening to myself, and I did not leave the house."

"Then how do you know that he stood at the gate?"

"That was where his tracks were seen, sir."

"I see. Well, Barrymore, unless you have anything else to tell me that is all I shall want to-night."

"Only to say, sir, that I very much hope that you will take up your residence here and that nothing will occur to cause you to change your mind. I speak in my own interest, for I have been very happy with Sir Charles, and I shall be sorry to leave him."

"You mean that you intend to go?"

"Only when it is convenient to you, sir."

"But your family have been with us for several generations, I believe, then not? I should be sorry to begin my life here by breaking an old family connection."

I seem to discern some signs of emotion upon the butler's white face.

"I feel that also, sir, and so does my wife. But to tell the truth, sir, we have both very much attached to Sir Charles, and his death gave us a shock and made these surroundings very painful to us. I fear that we shall never again be easy in our minds at Baskerville Hall."

BUILDING A CHILD'S CHARACTER.

Some interesting contrasts are being drawn in the parent's column of the school teacher's ranked in every quarter of the country, as an expert teacher, and in the New York Times Saturday Magazine. In the April number we have a sketch of the career of Miss Theodate Child, and Miss Farrell, the teacher who is the Superintendent of Education Emory eastward and unchangeable children in New York City gave it as her opinion that insolence in a child arose as a rule from imitation. She brought out a good point, however, in regard to rewards and refusal to disrespect and anger as follows:

"But may there not be cases where a spoiled, insolent child is the result of cooperation or tut temper on the part of the parent as well as the child? Do you not do this, and the child, you say, will, I dare say, be very much your way."

"Well, I'll tell the teacher knew that a child of his kind would make that mistake, and would not give a severe punishment for a severe offense. He knows that a whole side of his character has been developed and corrected. Such cases, that is where many persons would differ from a teacher's method, teachers of the past generation would differ from teachers of to-day. They would command, not ask. They would not, however, by asking instead of commanding, give the thing some weight, while the child is not liable to retaliation."

"But is it good for the child to be treated so?"

"Well, there are many people who say it is not. 'You are just spoiling that child,' they say, when they see a bolder of the habit of compliance, and that is what we want. And if we believe that life is a matter of habit, we are willing to bend the twig the best way we can. Habit is a tremendously strong thing. It is the result of repeated conformity, the habit of not thinking it at all best way."

BUILDING A CHILD'S CHARACTER

Some interesting contrasts are being drawn between the parents' method and the school teacher's method of managing a child's temper, in an interviews with an expert teacher, now studying in the New York Normal Kindergarten. In the April number of the magazine, Mrs. Theodore W. Birdsall Child," and Miss Farrell, the teacher, who is the Superintendent of Education among backward and unfortunate children in New York City, gave it as her opinion that insolence in a child is never as a rule from intentional. She brought out a novel point, which is in regards to rousing a child to disrespect and anger to provoke.

"Many times not to cases where reasonable inducements are offered, but for the temper on the part of the child. A teacher might say, 'You must not do this,' and the child retorts, 'I will, I will, I will, I will what I please.'

"You, as if the teacher knew that child, of who knew it would make that answer, she would not be angry, but gently to reply, 'I am sorry you feel that about it.' Then the teacher, she does not consider the child's question. That is where many parents would differ from a teacher and many teachers of the past generation would differ from teachers of to-day. They would command, not ask. The teacher, however, by asking instead of commanding, gives the thing she wants, while the child is not liable to resistance.

"But is it good for the child to be treated so?

"Well, there are many people who say it is not. You are just provoking the producing, they say. They are building up the habit of complaining, and this is what we want to do? We believe that life is a matter of habits, and we are willing to build them up in the best way we can. Habit is a tremendously strong thing. It is the basis of all inspiring courteously, the basis of all inspiring that is good. I don't think it is all habit myself."

HANDKERCHIEF SALE

For Saturday, 3 for 25c.

Last week we announced a Handkerchief Sale for to-morrow, Saturday, March 9th. The handkerchiefs we referred to are now in window and will go on sale at 10 o'clock, as take-them-quick price.

3 FOR 25 CTS.

These handkerchiefs are all good value at the regular prices, but we want to clear stock of all broken lots before placing our Xmas orders. Some are all linen hemstitched, others are embroidered and lace trimmed. The lace on some would cost you more than price of handkerchief.

—THE GREAT—

Silk and Dress Goods Home.

An acknowledged fact that The Robinson Co.'s store stands first in the estimation of the people as regards dress goods, silks and all the accessories. The way the materials have been moving in this department, show the appreciation of the new spring fabrics, which are materials of beauty. In anticipation of an early Easter, everything is in full swing.

SILKS—

Black and white, blue and white, brown and white, red and white, green and white, some in open check, broken checks, plaids, wee check and stripes, 50c, 75c, $1.00, $1.25 per yard.

JAPANESE WASH SILKS—

Plain and figured in white only, 50c yard.

TUSSOR SILK—

In natural shade, just the thing for an inexpensive shirt waist suit, 40c yd.
Thirty-six inch width—natural—$1.00 per yd.

CAP-IT-AL TAFFETA—

This silk we have handled for a number of seasons and have sole agency for it. We are not afraid to sell to our customers, knowing it will give every satisfaction. Ask for it. 75c per yard.

BLACK DRESS GOODS—

As we stated before the dull finished materials have first place this season. The beauty of our stock cannot be described; you must see it for yourself. Always a pleasure to show our goods, whether you buy or not, so do not be backward in asking to see them.

Shirts for Men and Boys.

The new spring ones are beautiful and hundreds of patterns and styles here to choose from.

At 50c we are showing an assortment of about twenty different patterns of Hair Cord goods that will give excellent wear. Sizes, 14 to 17.

At 75c and up to $1.50 we have an assortment that will enable us to please you no matter how critical your taste may be.

CRESCENT SHIRTS are made to fit and made to wear.

Boys' Spring Suits and Reefers.

At Robinson's Boys' Clothing is a specialized business—a foundation laying for future business. The boy who has been trained in correct ideas as to fit, style and service giving is apt to be a man of good taste in dress, and he's more than apt to keep on coming to Robinson's.

Is it any wonder that we insist on doing the boys' clothing business better than anybody else.

BOYS' REEFERS—Among other new arrivals are some very handsome spring weight Reefers for little fellows, 4 to 10 years of age. They are very much sought after. $3.50 to $5.00 each.

The New Raincoats for Men.

This is an important item at this time of the year. Spring weight Raincoats serve so many purposes, are such sensible garments for men that they are becoming all popular. It is a coat that will serve in the place of a spring and fall overcoat, and yet when a man is caught in a shower he is protected. Our stock is large and well assorted.

Prices range from $6.75 up to $15.00. Come and see them.

White Persian Lawns Will be Scarce.

Some people predict that there will be a shortage of white Persian Lawns. Some towns are out of Persians now. Jobbers and wholesale people cannot get delivery from the mills. We prepared ourselves for this present strong demand months and months ago. That's how we have good values at the popular prices, 10c to 50c yard.

Nainsooks.

Ladies who make their own whitewear are giving preference to Nainsooks. That soft nice feel that you find only in Nainsooks is the reason for preference over starchy fabrics.

The kinds most sold are at 15c, 18c and 20c yard.
Silk finished at 25c yard.

Skirts, Costumes, Coats, Ready for Easter.

—First Floor—

Extra Values in Prints.

We have good reasons to believe that our "Oak" Print at ten cents a yard is equal to the best print retailed at the price in Canada. This "Oak" print is our own brand and controlled by us. About 125 patterns to choose from, including navy, white, reds and grey back ground.

At 12 1-2 cents we give you the same reliable imported cloths as we sold you last year, including Scotch Indigo, Cramand Potter cloths.

At 12 1-2 cents we are showing "Just as Delane" in about 25 patterns. Particularly good for children's dresses.

When something extra strong is required we have for you the linen finished French Cambrics and the Scotch Drills, 15c, 18c and 20c yard.

Easter Gloves.

Easter will be here before any one realizes it. Most costumes being made, call for fairly long gloves. There is bound to be a rush for new gloves and it remains to be seen whether we will have enough to go around. The supply of long gloves is limited. This we do know, that any on hand now are better value than we can hope to procure later.

Long Silks, 75c, 90c and $1.00 pair.
Long Kids, $1.00 to $3.00 pair.
Fownes 2 dome fasteners, black, white, colors, $1.00 and $1.25 pair.
Better think of our gloves when making your gift selections for Easter.

Beautiful New Cottons.

Cotton is King and the Fairies seem to love to minister at his court, for cotton dress fabrics are the poetry of textiles. The statement isn't a bit too strong, the very wonder being how each new season can really find new beauty to add. Come see. Come, buy, if you'd be sure of getting a share of the choicest things. Sheer soft voiles, thin organdies, embroidered batistes, with many variations in each weave.

Collar and Cuff Setts.

Surprising the number of collar and cuff setts we sell. Lots of new "kinks" and prettinesses. A dainty collar and cuff sett brighten up a shirt waist suit wonderfully. At 25c, 50c, 75c and $1.00 a good variety. (Nice for Easter gifts.)

Linoleums and Floor Oilcloths.

Our big shipments of Linoleums and Oilcloths from the old country have arrived. From Scotland comes the best linoleum made in the world. Scotch others will not stand out a yard until it is thoroughly seasoned. If you are interested drop in and see the latest patterns. They are exclusively new. Florals divide honors with tile and block designs. For a kitchen floor there is nothing better than a number one linoleum. They beat hardwood floors half a mile and cost less money. They are cosier on the ankles and warmer to stand on. Half the labor keeps them clean. Fact of matter is people who have hardwood floors are covering with linoleum.

Our House Furnishing Department is Ready to Show you our Spring Floor Coverings, Curtains, etc. Values Guaranteed to be Equal to best in Canada.

PICTURED HAT FEVER.

In Paris there is just now proceeding a reasonable epidemic of hat fever, concerning which an answer to the question is related. A lady was quite proud of her feathers, but the fashion of hat fever from either hat or any other flower plant except one. The story runs that a rose next to set her fancy, and, being a lover of flowers, she carefully avoided them in her walks. One day, however, she stopped before a still life painting representing a basket of roses, and almost instantly she was seized with a sneezing fit. Clearly imagination had its part in the case.

CULTIVATE THE BEST

IN SPIRITUAL, MENTAL AND PHYSICAL EQUIPMENT.

THIS HONORS THE CREATOR

We Should Study Our Personal Appearance—Avoid Slovenly Habits—Develop the Mind, and Use the Intellect in the Master's Work—Make the Home Attractive For the Good of Our Children.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1907, by Rodgers Dixon, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., March 3.—In his sermon the preacher gives a special message of timely and practical value on the best equipment of men and women for service, spiritual, mental and physical. The text is I Kings vi, 35. And he carved thereon cherubims and palm trees and open flowers and covered them with gold fitted upon the carved work."

Most people have but little architectural imagination. When a great architect comes to them and says, "I am going to build a temple of fame or a schoolhouse or a state capitol or a cathedral or a palace, and it is to be so many feet high and so many feet wide, and it is to have a large porch and a hallway flanked by so many rooms," he might as well be talking in Sanskrit as far as most people are concerned. Drawings and specs and dimensions mean no more to the average mind than a wife's description of a walking suit which she is planning for the coming season means to an average husband.

Now, I am frank to say that I for one could never get an adequate conception of what the old Solomonic temple looked like from the plans which have been drawn for us in the Bible. I have not an architectural imagination keen enough to construct this temple from those figures. Some Bible students have, but I have not. As soon as I begin to study those plans I get the porches and the outer walls all mixed-up. But when the inspired author of the Bible comes to me and shows me one of the doors of the inner sanctuary and says, "This door is not only made out of fir wood, but it has beautiful carvings thereon of cherubims and palm trees and flowers in blossom, and all these exquisite figures are overlaid with gold," then I say: "If one little part of that temple was as beautiful as that, the whole temple must surely have been an iridescent dream of architectural beauty. All the gorgeous colorings of the rainbow must there have been frozen in stone. All the opalescent splendor of the ever changing surface of the seas must there have outgrown its columns and dome and walls and must have run like a tidal wave. All the divine chemistries which produced the marvelous blendings of an orchid patch must there have been exhausted in order to produce this ancient temple, which architecturally has been the marvel of the ages. From the perfume of the little we can in imagination conceive of the perfection of the whole. From the beautiful carving on the door of the inner sanctuary we can catch a glimpse of what must have been the beautiful entirety of the whole structure. 'And he carved cherubims and palm trees and open flowers and covered them with gold fitted upon the carved work.'"

If you ride through some of the vineyards now growing upon the hillsides where stone once stood the capitol of Samaria and find there the stone walls made out of most beautifully carved stones and exquisitely designed pillars which once adorned the ancient temples, you at once say, "The architect who designed those temples must have been a great lover of the beautiful. Thus when we read that the fir tree doors of the inner sanctuary were carved by a master hand into figures of cherubim and palm trees and flowers in blossom and all covered with gold we have a right to say that the God who designed that ancient temple was a God who loved the beautiful. We have only to look around us at the mountains, the valleys, the trees and the flowers and the glorious sunsets to be confirmed in that belief. I want this morning to take a step further. The God who loves beauty in nature and beauty in architecture loves also beauty in character. As he directed Solomon to adorn 'the temple with carvings, so he ordains that we, as temples, shall be adorned. God wishes us to consecrate to his service a beautiful body, a beautiful mind, a beautiful soul, a beautiful store and a beautiful service, a beautiful home and a beautiful estate and all upon these and everything beautiful for his dear name. He carved thereon cherubims and palm trees and open flowers and covered them with gold fitted upon carved work.'

The physical body has been aptly called 'the temple of the Holy Ghost.' Therefore, in its physical life it is incumbent upon us to study how we can make our personal presence just as attractive and winsome as possible. For his dear name's sake we

A MAGISTRATE'S EVIDENCE IN FAVOR OF ZAM-BUK

Mr. Perry JP

Read carefully the evidence of Magistrate Perry given below and you will find that judged by men of experience who are fully qualified to decide. Zam-Buk more than fulfils all that is claimed for it.

"The Pavilion,"
Goldfields, B.C.

After a very fair trial I have proved Zam-Buk eminently satisfactory. In my case it cured a skin rash of five years' standing when a doctor had been able to do any good for. I would certainly encourage any person to keep Zam-Buk in their house. It truly does even more than you claim for it. For my own part I would not now be without it in the house.
Yours very truly,
ROGER F. PERRY,
Justice of the Peace for B.C.

Facts About Zam-Buk

Zam-Buk is different to the other ointments and salves in being purely herbal and containing not a particle of animal oil or fat. This explains why a sore treated by it will immediately kill all germs, germs and prevent festering, suppuration or blood poisoning.

Zam-Buk has penetrating qualities as well as healing power and used as an embrocation for rheumatism, sciatica and neuralgia pains.

Zam-Buk by its unique healing flow was the praise and confidence of magistrates, doctors, nurses, and many women who know, freely at our expense.

WISE AND OTHERWISE.

Small Willie was playing with two ragged boys in front of the house, when his mother called him in.

"Willie," she said, "don't you know that those boys are bad associates for you?"

"Yes, mamma," replied the little philosopher, "and I'm a good associate for them."

Hymn Disorder—At the first symptoms of internal disorder, such as Loss of Vegetable Pills should be resorted to immediately. Two or three of these salutary pellets, taken before going to bed, followed by doses of one, two or three pills each night in succession, will serve as a preventive of attacks of dyspepsia and all the discomforts which follow in the train of that fell disorder. The means are simple when the way is known.

Do Not Delay.—When, through debility or nervousness, the blood, the prime agent in the body, is not carried to all parts thoroughly and properly, disease is sure to follow. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is a positive remedy for all forms of nervousness. Mrs. Fortune's Vegetable Pills will be found a most valuable and effective auxiliary to assist the nerve tonic with. They never fail. They go at once to the root of the trouble and work a permanent cure.

An elderly gentleman was riding on a street car the other day, and, being disposed to laugh, ant laughed so loud that he attracted the attention of a little boy sitting opposite. The boy gazed at him for a long time, and, at last, as the man's mirth did not cease, he remarked to his mother that the boy needed a spanking, and she replied that he didn't believe in spanking on an empty stomach, so he'd wait till they got home.

"Neither do I," turn him over."

Hickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup is so unparalleled for the cure of coughs, colds, influenza and diseases of the throat and lungs. The fame of its medicine rests upon years of successful cure in eradicating these troubles, and in protecting mankind from the fatal dangers of consumption, and the neglected cold leads to consumption, we cannot too highly commend its use in its early stages. Hickle's Syrup is the weapon, use it.

"Oh, yes, sir, please; I want a diamond ring and a new dress and some rouge to complete a pug dog and a box at the opera, and oh, ever so many things; but all ma wants is a dime's worth of bologna sausage."

"Hang it!" growled young Lovett to the girl of his heart, "it makes me mad every time I think of that $100, I lost to-day. I certainly feel as if I'd like to get even with that fellow Dash."

"Two?" he exclaimed. "Why, you don't intend to marry both, do you?"

"No, sir."

"Then, who are they?" he inquired.

"Why," she replied naively, "the twins that's next to the baby, of course!"

Danger of Using Alcoholic Mixtures or Cold Tar Tablets.

The most dangerous thing that one can do when afflicted with a cough or cold is to use a medicine that contains whisky or other liquor. It is the same with cold tar product. Putting aside all moral considerations to filling we with whisky or drugs because one has a cough or cold, it is a positively criminal act should be sufficient to keep one from using the so-called medicines.

The good qualities as well as the evil qualities of liquor are great enough to justify the prohibition of its use in all cases of coughs and colds. Whisky will still further irritate and give relief to the inflamed membrane in the nose, throat and lungs.

The only medicines that are used in this way by druggists stands from the throat, and the throat, and the throat, and

SHADOWS OF THE PAST.

Lincoln J. Carter's emotional drama, "Shadows of the Past," will come to the Irisee Opera House, Friday evening, 22nd March. Some extraordinary clever character work is shown in the play. The character of Adolphus Bood, the eccentric fussy little English barrister, is one of the most pleasant bits of comedy work that has appeared on the stage. Miss Julie Gray, who plays the title role in which she is given a wide scope to show her dramatic abilities, plays the part to perfection, and in a way that always elicits the applause and sympathy of an audience. It is that of a mother who sacrifices her honor in order that her child may be spared to her. It is one of the most unselfish acts of womanhood ever exhibited and one that every courageous woman will sanction and duplicate were she placed in the same position.

NO CONTAGION FOUND.

Dr. Higginson, Dominion Veterinary Inspector, was up from Ottawa in regard to an alleged outbreak of contagion among cattle near Odessa. In company with local veterinaries, he visited the places, and one of the local doctors, on questioning the farmer, found that he had used the rubbing some poisonous powder into the animal's skin to kill external vermin. The poison went through the system of the cows, and three of them died. There was nothing of a contagious nature found. The remaining cows will get well if the farmer ceases rubbing them with poison. The cows, in licking themselves, took the poison into their system. This should serve as a warning to farmers.

Spencer, B. Sharp, W. Down.

MUSICAL CLUB.

The meeting of March 2d, which was arranged by Mrs. N. T. Sills, was extremely interesting. The subject—Folk Songs and Dances—was ably read by Mrs. J. Gibson, in which she clearly brought out the different national music that was characteristic of its own country. The reading was illustrated by music, both instrumental and vocal. The club fell grateful to the gentlemen, Mr. Cullen, Mr. Harrison and Mr. Storey, who ably assisted and also Mr. Miller, of Newburgh, who kindly took part on other days. The platform was decorated very suitably by Mrs. Sills, and flags of every nation were used to drape the walls.

The next meeting, March 16th, will be on "German Composers" and will be under the management of Mrs. M. C. Bogart and Mrs. M. S. Madole.

A BIRTHDAY PARTY.

One of the most pleasant gatherings that we have had in our vicinity for some time occurred at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Benjamin, Amelianburg, Prov. China, when a birthday party was given in honor of Mrs. Benjamin's sister, Miss Bridgen, of Walhalla, N. Dakota. The guests, which numbered about forty, began to arrive at 7 p.m., and after a genial hand-shake, entered the dining room, where a sumptuous spread was laid. The tables were laden with an abundance of everything to please the taste. After indulging in all the good things, cards and music were the next order of the evening, which were kept up until the "wee sma' hours" when all joined in thanking the host and hostess for the pleasant evening spent together. Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin received many handsome presents, showing the high esteem in which they are held, and we extend them when in the ice west of the many friends we have left behind them in their former home, Odessa.

The Day-light Store

Saturday, Monday and Tuesday we celebrate the birthday of this business with the Greatest of all Anniversary Sales.

We honestly believe that no sale event in any way has ever rivalled this one in importance.

Months have been spent in preparation for this occasion. Words cannot be marshalled that are strong enough to do justice to the extraordinary values and the vast assortments that are ready. Thousands of dollars' worth of advance merchandise will be sacrificed in celebration of this store's birthday.

"Facts are stubborn things and figures don't lie." That quotation never applied more forcibly than to this great anniversary event. If we can only impress you with the FACTS and the VALUES, we will have the biggest success in our history. In every instance prices are amazingly low. It is a fact that we have outdone our greatest efforts of the past. It is a fact that we are better equipped to handle an immense business than ever before.

We ask you to come and investigate these facts. We are printing a solid ad. of matchless values. Even at that there are many we have not space to mention. It will pay you to make a trip to this store from any instance. We cannot fill mail or telephone orders.

This Madill Store—famous for low prices and matchless values—won its fame by avoiding every feature that adds unnecessary cost to the distribution of merchandise. We always sold our wares for cash, on a slender margin of profit. We make no concessions that all may not share, that is simplified store-keeping.

Trinity Church

The above Handsome Edifice was Dedicated on Sunday last—Large Congregations Attended each Service—A Memorable Day in Church History in Napanee.

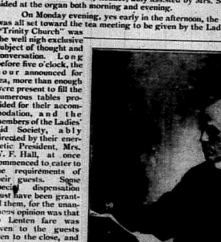
The long desired day of the dedication of the new Methodist Church in Napanee has come and gone, and the memory of it will be an inspiration to all branches of the Church for many years to come. Sunday morning early the congregation began to assemble, giving promise of a full church long before the hour of service. Punctually at 10.30, the hour announced for service, the Rev. W. H. Emsley, the Minister of the Church, stepped upon the platform, followed by the President of the Conference, Rev. J. J. Rae; the Chairman of the District, Rev. Richard Duke; Rev. J. R. Conn, M.A.; Presbyterian Minister, and Revds. J. Harvey Strike, J. H. Mears, and Hugh Cairns, ex-President of the Montreal Conference. The service commenced with the singing of the Doxology, and was participated in by the ministers named, the Rev. J. J. Rae preaching the dedicatory sermon, which was one of unction and gracious influence. After the responsive reading of the 122d Psalm, John Raymond Dafoe, Esq., on behalf of the Trust Board, presented the key to the President of the Conference who received the keys of the edifice from Mr. Dafoe's hand. The collection at the morning service amounted to the sum of $432.88.

In the afternoon the veteran Sunday School Superintendent of the Conference, Wm. Johnson, Esq., of Belleville, gave the address to the school, which assembled for the first time under its new conditions. All the service the perfect adaptability of the new building was demonstrated, as the auditorium and school proper thrown into one were again taxed to their utmost to accommodate the vast multitude who were attracted to the opening service. An orchestra of ten instruments, assisted by Mr. Paul Psalm, John Raymond Dafoe, Esq., on behalf of the Trust Board, presented the Church for dedication, which was accepted by the President of the Conference who received the keys of the edifice from Mr. Dafoe's hand. The collection at the morning service amounted to the sum of $432.88.

The collection at the morning service amounted to the sum of $432.88.

In the evening, church, school room, class rooms and corridors were crowded to the full, and great numbers of people were unable to obtain entrance. Rev. Mr. Rae again occupied the pulpit, preaching from the Saviour's advice to seek to enter in at the straight gate, and holding the great congregation attent to the glowing counsel and warning which fell from his lips. The collection for the day amounted to $816.21, by Mrs. F. E. VanLaven, Leader, ably assisted by Mrs. Stewart Lockridge, who presided at the organ both morning and evening.

On Monday evening early in the afternoon, the busie and stir of the town was all set toward the tea meeting to be given by the Ladies' Aid of the Church, and the well nigh exclusive subject of thought and talk. Everyone is for a bite before five o'clock, the numerous tables provided for their accommodation, and the members of the Ladies' Aid Society, ably directed by their energetic President, Mrs. W. F. Hall, at once commenced to cater to the requirements of their guests. Some special dispensation must have been granted them, for the unanimous opinion was that no Lenten fare was provided by the guests even to the close, and after more than a thousand people had been fed still the supply was equal to it in both quantity and quality, for many more. The ladies are to be congratulated on their perfect management and on the financial results of their effort, the tea meeting proceeds being over $100.



REV. W. H. EMSLEY, Pastor.

At 8 o'clock, as announced, the Chairman and Secretary of the Building Committee, accompanied by the ministers present, took their places on the platform, and after the singing by a quartette of an anthem which was rendered by request, having been sung at Witton forty years ago on the occasion of a dedicatory service, the Chairman, Rev. W. H. Emsley, called upon Mr. W. F. Hall, the Secretary, to submit to the audience a report of the financial condition of the Church, which showed that with $15,000 of additional subscription the new Trinity Church would be started on its going free from debt, save in expense of carpeting and some furnishing in the front. The Rev. J. J. Rae was then requested to appeal to the liberality of the people to lift the burden from the shoulders of the Trustees who had provided for their comfort in the building of this most superb edifice, nor did he disappoint them in the results of the evening being the announcement of the subscription of over $15,000. Right heartily the congregation joined in singing the Doxology and the Rev. Richard Duke pronounced the benediction, and thus closed the most magnificent exhibition of spiritual financial enthusiasm ever witnessed in this district.

Of Mr. Emsley, the beloved pastor, who has devoted all his time, outside of his onerous ministerial duties, to an oversight of the beautiful edifice from inception to completion, it is unnecessary to speak too highly or in words too strong. The least he termed falsome His genial manner and rare tact conduced in no small degree to the harmony that prevailed during the past twenty-two months, and early and late he was at his post furthering the erection of the building. Much lay so near to his heart. It was surely a happy moment for him when he was able to announce the new Church had been entirely freed from debt. All honors to Rev. W. H. Emsley.

The architect, Mr. B. Dillon, of Brockville, is loud in his praise of the capable local help which he received, and all who have participated in the work have expressed themselves as highly pleased with the treatment accorded them. The window scheme of the church was highly cogolized, and the memorial windows everywhere commented upon. Especially so Mrs. C. B. Perry, who for many years was President of the Ladies' Aid, depicting the Christ in the Home in Bethany being a superbly rich interior, while that to the memory of Mr. Sidney Warner, a magnificent exterior, showing the Saviour with a child in his arms and disciples in the background and exquisite in tone and color. The T. N. Lyons Co., of Toronto, are to be congratulated on the manner of this section of the work.

Church and school carpeted alike throughout with a beautiful Brussels crimson and green floral and fleur-de-lis pattern, supplied by The Robinson Co., present a rich and attractive appearance.

The kitchen is thoroughly equipped with all necessary appliances, even to a capacious refrigerator, and the gas stoves, whilst in the cloak room adequate provision is made by racks for outer garments.

The church is 90 x 140 feet, and not an inch of waste or unfinished space in it.

The steam heating scheme furnished by the John Lewis Co., of Belleville, through Mr. T. H. Wallar, has been already vindicated in the process of the construction of the work.

The acoustic properties of the church are perfect, and numerous expressions of admiration were heard concerning this important feature of the building.

The cut flowers furnished by the Dale Estate, Florists, Brampton, were most beautiful, and added to the charm of the opening services. Magnificent roses, exquisite carnations and their accompanying tracery of greens were most superb.

Our issue of the 1st inst. gave a full description of the building and its construction. Great credit should be given to Mr. William A. Embury, the contractor for the carpenter work, who carried to successful completion the most elaborate scheme of roof building and general detail we have ever known, whilst to Messrs. Thos. Harrison, of Kingston, L. and F. Young and G. Pearson, the decorators, belong the honor of the raising of the walls, after Mr. Thos. Dyas had so well prepared the way by building the foundations. Mr. Geo. Lewis, who superintended the making of the cement blocks and Mr. Geo. Wales (with Mr. Embury) as mason artificers, deserve credit for their good work, whilst to Mr. Dafoe but for the highest praise has been accorded to Messrs. R. Light & Son for the substantial wood work, which elicits the admiration of all.

Mention must be made of the magnificent work of Mr. Paul Peterson, who, in the early stages of the roofing work, showed what a thoroughly first-class sailor man could do.

Messrs. Madole & Wilson were the contractors for the roofing.

The management have been congratulated by Mr. Dillon, the architect, on their singular good fortune in having two such men as Messrs. J. R. Dafoe and W. T. Waller, who, as Superintendent of construction and Clerk of Works, have given themselves without reserve to the successful carrying out of the project, and whilst serving the church without remuneration of any sort whatever, have also contributed handsomely to its financial success.

NOTE—A limited supply of this issue of The Beaver can be purchased at the office at the regular price, 5c each or two for 5c. For the convenience of our readers who may wish to send copies to friends at a distance we will supply The Beaver in wrapper ready for mailing.

CHAMBERS.

It is with regret we report the death of the late John Judin who passed away at his family residence on the 4th inst. He contracted a severe cold some two months ago which baffled medical skill, and death claimed him as its victim. He leaves a wife and four small boys to mourn the loss of a kind husband and loving father. The sympathy of the community is for the bereaved family. Mr. Judin labored in our midst for a number of years. He was industrious, honest and a hard working man, and a great deal to be among all who knew him. The funeral was held in the White church, Morven, on Saturday, 9th inst.

Mr. J. H. Shull is so improved he is able to walk on the days.

Mr. J. Bowerman is preparing to build a new drive house, and has the material on the spot.

Mr. N. Hill is busy hauling logs for the re-modelling of his in the near future.

Mr. W. J. Baker has resigned his position on the G.T.R., Ernestown. Mr. F. Baker a position at Amherst Island.

Quite a number from here attended the dedication of the new church at Napanee and all report an enjoyable time.

GRAND IN KINGSTON.

Sergeant Kitty

Helen Byron, the star of the company, that is to present the military comic opera at the Grand Opera House in Kingston, on Tuesday, March 19th, says that if she were not a Californian, she would be a Canadian, and although she owes her birth to the former it was in the latter that she made her first ladies' dress. She was for a long time leading lady in stock in Toronto and has many warm admirers in that city. Sergeant Kitty is a bright opera with a most amusing plot, and Miss Byron has in James McElhern and Tom Hadaway two comedians that know how to get all the fun out of it. The chorus aith the company is a most attractive one.

of durability in a high-speed machine like the cream separator. No other machine is turned so many times a day, winter and summer, if must not only be thorough work, but to be persistently profitable, it must be durable.

U.S. CREAM SEPARATORS are built for long service. A solid, low frame encloses entirely all the operating parts, protecting them from dirt and danger of injury. The parts are few, simple and strong. Self-balancing bowl at high speed, combined with enclosing gearing, reduce wear as well as insure the easiest operation. Such simple and thorough construction is what enables the U. CASTORIA. The Kind You Have Always Bought

LETTER FROM CUBA.

FROM EX-WARDEN H. A. BAKER.

Cotolliex, Cuba, Feb. 28th, 1907.
Mr. Editor:—As I have plenty of leisure time I thought I would drop a few lines to The Beaver.

Mr. D. C. Mills and I left Napanee on the 15th January, called from New York on the 19th, and landed in the quaint old city of Havana, Cuba, with its beautiful harbor, ancient forts, buildings, new and quaint, on the 23rd. We had a very rough voyage on the Warren Line Steamer. The crew said the worst they had experienced for years. Mr. Mills proved to be the best sailor of the party, as he was the only one of the twelve sixty of the whole list of passengers to appear at the table on the second morning after sailing.

After spending a few days or about two weeks in Havana, we left there and accepted the invitation of Mr. Cobb, a former resident of Napanee, to visit his sugar plantation, which is situated on the line of the government railway along which are located a number of sugar mills in the district that were built at the time of the Spanish war. Mr. Cobb's mill at Moude looks like Cobb, is a land of Manitoba wheat fields, and I am sure you will not be surprised when I say that I am not therefore dont be in a hurry for a visit from me. Now, Mr. Editor, you and I think this is the way this fellow Cobb has come to own a sugar mill. Cobbles that comes in view from the train window is owned by him and upon which is owned and run by the Cobb-Arnoldi Developing Company, of which a large tract of land here, and are selling it to those who wish to buy it in acres. This hotel is beautifully situated on the bay of Cotolliex, and is two stories high, with three acres of ground. It is equipped up to date with hot water, electric light, water works, gas fixtures, large dining rooms, reading rooms, baths, etc. No liquors or cigars are sold on the premises. Cotolliex is only about four years old, is situated on a level tract of land, and consists of an ice plant, electric light plant, water works, hotel, store, postoffice and bank and large American and Canadian population. Mr. Cobb has invested to get in a place where the Hog-Cholera difficulty sometimes is considerable difficulty sometimes in Havana, and several cases have been taken in hand on the farm, and recovered from, here at Cotolliex, formerly of Bowmanville, Ont., who has charge of two hundred acres of orange, grape fruit, bananas, pineapples, cane fields, grove of orange, grape fruit and banana trees of five hundred acres, owned by a company, and one acre of cane field. Mr. Bowmanville has been here for several years, and I have been informed that before our arrival, still lower down in the country, and that at the same time there are bonanzas ahead of Cobb, as he will in the future grow. I saw a garden in which were growing almost every vegetable that we have here, and also Canadian potatoes, cabbages, lettuce, tomatoes, cucumbers, etc., and I was informed that I could get ripe strawberries in the month of May. The climate is temperature, the thermometer registering from sixty-five degrees in the morning to eighty-three in the day time, and the nights always cool and pleasant.

Fearing I have already trespassed on your space, I must close my communications, with close.

Respectfully yours,
H. A. BAKER.

SPRING BLOODTROUBLES

BILEANS CLEAR THE SKIN OF PIMPLES.

Humors and impurities in the blood force their way to the surface in the form of pimples, boils, eruptions, and other unsightly sores. Nature has provided a remedy for these troubles, and that remedy is to take, not cathartics or cathartic pills, but a tonic, which will act on the digestion. Women with skin blotches and eruptions should not use cosmetics. These substances, however, only drive the humors back into the system, and the eruptions appear in some other form. The only way to get rid of these troubles is to take a tonic, which will act on the digestion, and thus purify the blood. Bileans are the best tonic for this purpose. They are a vegetable compound, and contain no mercury or other mineral. Bileans are sold by druggists at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and will be sent by mail on receipt of price by the Bileans Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

DR. ORONHYATEKHA'S WILL.

The will of the late Dr. Oronhyatekha, Supreme Chief Ranger of the Independent Order of Foresters, was read to the family and intimate friends at the late residence, 347 Jarvis street, Friday afternoon, after the interment in Mount Pleasant cemetery. The will, which names the United Trust and Executors, is subject to certain bequests and directions, which will be considered in turn.

Approximately, the estate, including realty and personality, is not likely to exceed $75,000, and may be under that amount. The document is very largely a family matter, as the late Dr. Oronhyatekha, and the daughters, Mrs. Percy Jeffreys, too practically, were beneficiaries.

BEQUESTS TO THE I. O. F.

In certain contingencies, however, certain bequests go to the I. O. F. Possessed of the deed of gift, Archibald Oronhyatekha has interest in Forestry Island, by the will of the order. In his life time Dr. Oronhyatekha gave the Orphans' Home and Industrial Farm, on which it stands, and the Island, to the I. O. F. When Dr. Acland, a brother-in-law of the late Lord Dufferin, and the remainder of the island, except the house which the family will retain as the property of Mrs. Johnston, will revert to the I. O. F. for the benefit of the Orphanage. In one particular there is some little discrepancy between the will and a deed respecting a part of the island.

A FARM OF 300 ACRES.

"The Pines" is lately valuable, and undoubtedly, handsome property, and comprises 300 acres, which descended to the late Dr. Oronhyatekha as part of his Indian rights. To this land he added a number of 100 acre lots. The family mansion is picturesque, and the building is generously fitted up in every respect. Unfortunately "The Pines" is left to Dr. Jas. Johnston's sister. His life interest in the estate in Foresters' Island has recently ceased. Dr. Acland Oronhyatekha has a share of the personality, but sufficient of that is bequeathed to Mrs. Jeffreys to divide the entire estate equally and positively, no doubt, as was agreed from present estimates.

Several tiemens of the will relate to the I. O. F., which, certainly was never absent from the testator's thoughts and affections.

THE LIFE INSURANCE.

As the I. O. F. does not insure for more than $5,000, the deceased carried insurance in other companies. One policy, it is said, is for $30,000, with smaller amounts elsewhere. Accordingly to those who knew him true, the late Dr. Oronhyatekha did not try to amass an immense fortune. Had he kept host money-making, his estate would have totalled half a million, but if he did consider it better to give than to receive, compensation arises in the form of a memory that will linger long and remain green.

BABY'S SMILE.

Baby's smile indicates that he is well and happy. It is only the sick child who is cross and restless. And the mother can depend upon it that when her baby cries he is not crying simply to be ugly—that is not his nature—he is crying because he is ill, sick—and possibly his little stomach is out of order. The mother will find Baby's Own Tablets a most effective cure for all the minor ailments of childhood. The mother who uses Baby's Own Tablets is never heard to cross, cranky, peevish, fretful babies—the kind that are a source of misery. Mrs. Jos. Lagrez, Caraquet, N. B., says: "At the age of four Baby's Own Tablets cured my little one was wasting and failing. He would cry night and day, and I did not expect he could get anything to help him. After giving him the Tablets there was a great change and he has since thrived fine." The Tablets are sold by all druggists or by mail at 25 cents a box from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Ladies Frequently
Suffer Losses through the Dishonesty of their Merchants and Dealers.

The women of Canada frequently suffer many losses and great inconveniences through the dishonest greed of their merchants in the matter of patterns and common preparations to buy. Ladies can no longer be robbed and relied upon.

This is specially true of the dressmaker and dealers who handle and sell the DIAMOND DYES. Unprincipled dealers put up by speculators and sold to the unwary customer, who is ignorant for the genuine DIAMOND DYES, so that they can make more profit.

DIAMOND DYES are made from the purest and best drugs, and the process that can be produced, always guarantee perfect results, and the strength and purity of the colors are unequalled for brilliancy and power. The dyes produced from DIAMOND DYES are warranted not to crock or fade, and will not spot or injure the most delicate fabric of silk, wool, cotton or mixed goods. They are the most simple and easy dyes yet manufactured, and any lady can dye a beautiful, fast color, even if she has never dyed before. Ladies should always insist upon having DIAMOND DYES, as they are the only dyes that will always produce good results. Sold by druggists and dealers everywhere. FROM THE NORTH.

Bobcaygeon Independent.

Mr. Alvin Switzer returned this week from Lansdowne, in the Cobalt district, after spending two months there. With a companion, Mr. Bowerman, he engaged in the cutting of ice. For months he has the lake all to himself, one side, and the Montreal River on the other. The supply of ice in the town is not convenient, for there are few wells, and most people get it off the lake. When they first commenced operations they had to cut ice in a few spots to get down, and stored it at 12c. a hundred. Later on, as the thickness increased, and stored by the ton, prices went up to 25c. a hundred. Mr. Switzer's men averaged 225 lbs. to the block, and 1,000 blocks to the ton. The weather was favorable for getting out on windy days Mr. Switzer can put up forty feet of ice a cutter would make, but he learned to pass standing in the ice, and the work was carried on at comparative comfort all day. Last year he experienced the warmest fall of snow for the years of eighteen inches. Horse hire at Latchford is another expensive, 50c an hour for teams, and they are all busy. Every man of the lot being engaged by prospectors and workers of mining claims, who walk in to Latchford by stages, and then hire a team to cadge them in to their claim, often taking three days to a trip. The traffic of people there on mining has been large all winter, and every day on the ice they would meet parties going and coming with their teams, and dog teams, and scarcely ever seen one on foot, all seeking their fortunes in minerals. Everybody there is ready to work with

PAIN

Pain in the head—pain anywhere, has its cause. Pain is congestion, pain is blood pressure—nothing else usually. At least, so says Dr. Shoop, and to prove it he has created a little pink tablet. That tablet—called Dr. Shoop's Headache Tablet—relieves blood pressure away from pain centers. Its effects are charming, absolutely delightful. Gentle, though safely, it surely equalizes the blood circulation.

If you have a headache, it's blood pressure. If it's periodic periods with women, same cause. If you are sleepless, restless, nervous, it's blood congestion—blood pressure. That surely is a certainty, for Dr. Shoop's Headache Tablets end it in 20 minutes, and the tablets simply distribute the unnatural blood pressure.

Bruise your finger, and doesn't it get red, and swell, and pain you? Of course it does. It's congestion, blood pressure. You'll find it when pain is—always. It's simply Common Sense.

We sell at 25 cents, and cheerfully recommend

THE HOUND OF THE BASKERVILLES

BY A. CONAN DOYLE.

Author of "The Green Flag" and "The White Company."

"It is useless for us to pretend that we do not know you, Dr. Watson," said he. "The records of your detective have reached us here, and you could not celebrate him without being known yourself. When Mortimer told me your name he could not deny your identity. If you are here, then it follows that Mr. Sherlock Holmes is interesting himself in the matter, and I am naturally curious to know what point he may take."

"I am afraid that I cannot answer that question."

"May I ask if he is going to honour us with a visit himself?"

"He cannot leave town at present. He has other cases which engage his attention."

"What a pity! He might throw some light on that which is so dark to us. But as to your own researches, if there is any possible way in which I can be of service to you I trust that you will command me. If I had any indication of the nature of your suspicions, or how you propose to investigate the case, I might perhaps even now give you some aid or advice."

"I assure you that I was simply here upon a visit to my friend Sir Henry, and that I need no help of any kind."

"Excellent!" said Stapleton. "You are perfectly right to be wary and discreet. I am justly reproved for what I feel was an unjustifiable intrusion, and I promise you that I will not mention the matter again."

We had come to a point where a narrow grassy path struck off from the road and wound away across the moor. A steep, boulder-sprinkled hill lay upon the right which had in bygone days been cut into a granite quarry. The face which was turned towards us formed a dark cliff, with ferns and brambles growing in its nickes. From over a distant rise there floated a grey plume of smoke.

A moderate walk along this moorpath brings us to Merripit House," said he. "Perhaps you will spare an hour that I may have the pleasure of introducing you to my sister."

My first thought was that I should be by Sir Henry's side. But when I remembered the pile of papers and bills with which his study table was littered. It was certain that I could not help him with those. And Holmes had expressly said that I should study the neighbors upon the moor. I accepted Stapleton's invitation, and we turned together down the path.

"It is a wonderful place, the moor," said he, looking round over the undulating downs, long green rollers, with crests of jagged granite foaming up into fantastic surges. "You never tire of the moor. You cannot think the wonderful secrets which it contains. It is so vast, and so barren, and so mysterious."

"You know it well, then?"

"I have only been here two years. The residents would call me a new comer. We came shortly after Sir Charles settled. But my tastes lead me to explore every part of the country round, and I should think that there are few men who know it better than I do."

"Is it so hard to know?"

"Very hard. You see, for example, this great plain to the north with the queer hills breaking out of it. Do you observe anything remarkable about them?"

"It would be a rare place for a gallop."

"You would naturally think so and the thought has cost several their lives before now. You notice these bright green spots scattered thickly over it?"

"Yes, they seem more fertile than the rest."

Stapleton laughed.

"That is the great Grimpen Mire," said he. "A false step yonder means death to man or beast. Only yesterday I saw one of the moor ponies wander into it. He never came out. I saw his head for quite a long time craning out of the bog-hole, but it sucked him down at last. Even in dry seasons it is a danger to cross it, but after these autumn rains it is an awful place. And yet I can find my way to the very heart of it and return alive. By George, there is another of those miserable ponies!"

Something brown was rolling and tossing among the green sedges. Then a long, agonized, writhing neck shot upwards and a dreadful cry echoed over the moor. It turned me cold with horror, but my companion's nerves seemed to be stronger than mine.

"It's gone!" said he. "The mire has him. Two in two days, and many more, perhaps, for they get in the way of going there in the dry weather, and there is always some hope of finding a mire has them in its clutch. It's a bad place, the great Grimpen Mire."

"And you say you can penetrate it?"

"Yes, there are one or two paths which a very active man can take. I have found them out."

"But why should you wish to go into so horrible a place?"

"Well, you see the hills beyond? They are really islands cut off on all sides by the impassable mire, which has crawled round them in the course of years. That is where the rare plants and the butterflies are; if you have the wit to reach them."

"I shall try my luck some day."

He looked at me with a surprised face.

"For God's sake put such an idea out of your mind," said he. "Your blood would be upon my head. I assure you that there would not be the least chance of your coming back alive. It is only by remembering certain complex landmarks that I am able to do it."

"Hallos!" I cried. "What is that?"

A long, low moan, indescribably sad, swept over the moor. It filled the whole air, and yet it was impossible to say whence it came. From a dull murmur it swelled into a deep roar, and then sank back into a melancholy, throbbing murmur once again. Stapleton looked at me with a curious expression in his face.

"Queer place, the moor!" said he.

"But what is it?"

"The peasants say it is the Hound of the Baskervilles calling for its prey. I've heard it once or twice before, but never quite so loud."

I looked round, with a chill of fear in my heart, at the huge swelling plain, mottled with the green patches of rushes. Nothing stirred over the wide expanse save a pair of ravens, which croaked loudly from a tor behind us.

"You are an educated man. You don't believe such nonsense as that?" said I. "What do you think is the cause of so strange a sound?"

"Bogs make queer noises sometimes. It's the settling down, or the water local, or something."

"No, no, that was a living voice."

"Well perhaps it was. Did you ever hear a bittern booming?"

"No, I never did."

"It's a very rare bird—practically extinct—in England now, but all things are possible upon the moor. Yes, I should not be surprised to learn that what we have heard is the cry of the last of the bitterns."

"It's the weirdest, strangest thing that ever I heard in my life."

"Yes, it is rather an uncanny place altogether. Look at the hill-side yonder. What do you make of those?"

The whole steep slope was covered with grey circular rings of stone, a score of them at least.

"What are they? Sheep-pens?"

"No, they are the homes of our early ancestors. Prehistoric man lived thickly on the moor, and as no one has particular has lived there since, we find all his little arrangements exactly as he left them. These are his wigwams with the roofs off. You can even see his hearth and his couch if you have the curiosity to go inside."

"Well it is quite a town. When was it inhabited?"

"Neolithic man—no date."

"What did he do?"

"He grazed his cattle on these slopes, and he began to dig for tin when the bronze sword began to supersede the stone axe. Look at the great trench in the opposite hill. That is his mark. Yes, you will find some very singular points about the moor, Dr. Watson. Oh, excuse me an instant! It is surely Cyrpidium."

A small fly or moth had fluttered across our path, and in an instant Stapleton was rushing with extraordinary energy and speed in pursuit of it. To my dismay the creature flew straight for the great mire, and my companion once never paused for an instant, bounding from tuft to tuft behind it, his green net waving in the air. His grey clothes and jerky, zigzag, irregular progress made him look like some huge moth himself. I was standing watching his pursuit with a mixture of admiration for his extraordinary activity and fear lest he should lose his footing in the treacherous mire, when I heard the sound of steps, and turning round found a woman near me upon the path. She had come from the direction in which the plume of smoke indicated the position of Merripit House, but the dip of the moor had hid her until she was quite close.

I could not doubt that this was the Miss Stapleton of whom I had been told, since ladies of any sort must be few upon the moor, and I remembered that I had heard someone describe her as being a beauty. The woman who approached me was certainly that, and of a most uncommon type. There could not have been a greater contrast between her and her brother, for Stapleton was neutral tinted, with light hair and grey eyes, while she was darker than any brunette whom I have seen in England—slim, elegant, and tall. She had a proud, finely cut face, so regular that it might have seemed impassive were it not for the sensitive mouth and the beautiful dark, eager eyes. With her perfect figure and elegant dress she was, indeed, a strange apparition upon a lonely moorland path. Her eyes were on her brother as I turned, and then she quickened her pace towards me. I had raised my hat, and was about to make some explanatory remark, when her own words turned all my thoughts into a new channel.

"Go back," she said. "Go straight back to London, instantly."

I could only stare at her in stupid surprise. Her eyes blazed at me, and she stamped the ground impatiently with her foot.

"Why should I go back?" I asked. "I cannot explain," she spoke in a low, eager voice, with a curious lilp in her utterance. "But for God's sake do what I ask you. Go back and never set foot upon the moor again."

"But I have only just come."

"Man, man!" she cried. "Can you not tell when you mean what you say? Can you not grant me so much? Go back to London! Start this very night! Get away from this place at all costs! Hush, my brother is coming! Not a word of what I have said. Would you mind getting that orchid for me among the marsh-tufts yonder? We are very rich in orchids on the moor, though, of course, you are rather late to see the beauties of the place."

Stapleton had abandoned his chase and came back to us breathing hard and flushed with his exertions.

"Halloa, Beryl!" said he, and it seemed to me that the tone of his greeting was not altogether a cordial one.

"Well, Jack, you are very hot."

"Yes, I was chasing a Cyclopides. He is very rare and seldom found in the late autumn. What a pity that I should have missed him!" He spoke unconcernedly but his small light eyes glanced incessantly from the girl to me.

"You have introduced yourselves, I can see."

"Yes. I was telling Sir Henry that it was rather late for him to see the true beauties of the moor."

"Why, who do you think this is?"

"I imagine that it must be Sir Henry Baskerville."

"No, no," said I. "Only a humble commoner, but his friend. My name is Dr. Watson."

A flush of vexation passed over her expressive face. "We have been talking at cross purposes," said she.

"Why, you had not very much time to lose," said her brother remarked, with the same questioning eyes.

"I talked as if Dr. Watson were a resident instead of being merely a visitor," said she. "It cannot much matter to him whether it is early or late for the orchids. But you will come on, will you not, and see Merripit House?"

A short walk brought us to it, a black, melancholy house, once the farm of some grazier in the old prosperous days, but now put into repair and turned into a modern dwelling. An orchard surrounded it, but the trees, as is usual upon the moor, were stunted and nipped, and the effect of the whole place was mean and melancholy. We were admitted by a strange wizened, rusty-coated old man servant, who seemed in keeping with his master. Inside, however, there were large rooms furnished with an elegance in which I seemed to recognize the taste of the lady. As I looked from their window at the interminable granite-faced moor rolling unbroken to the farthest horizon I could not but marvel at what could induce people to live unless compelled, and this beautiful woman to live in such a place.

"Queer spot to choose, is it not?" said he, as if in answer to my thought.

"And yet we manage to make ourselves fairly happy, do we not, Beryl?"

"Quite happy," said she, but there was no ring of conviction in her voice.

"I had a school," said Stapleton. "It was in the north country. The work to a man of my temperament was mechanical and uninteresting, but the privilege of living with youth, of helping to mould those young minds and of impressing them with one's own character and ideals, was very dear to me. However, the fates were against us. A serious epidemic broke out in the school and three of the boys died. It never recovered from the blow, and much of my capital was irretrievably swallowed up. And yet, if it were not for the loss of the charming companionship of the boys, I could rejoice over my own misfortune, for, with my strong tastes for botany and zoology, I find an unlimited field of work here, and my sister is as devoted to Nature as I am. All this, Dr. Watson, has been learned by her since yesterday, and expression as you surveyed the moor out of our window."

To be continued.

DOUBLE FOLD TAPESTRY—Did you ever see a double fold carpet? First time you are in let us show you. We get them over in England. Let us show you the advantage there is in buying them, and the best of it is there is no extra charge per square yard over the price of regular width goods. Not expensive either.

PATENT BRUSSELS, 75c yd.—This make of carpet has been a great success with us. Borders to match all the new designs. Has the appearance of a dollar Brussels, and best of all satisfactory wear.

Swiss Taffeta Silk Our Cap-it-all Brand.

In every conceivable shade this silk has been handled by us for several seasons, and we know what we are talking about, when we claim that it will give you every satisfaction. This silk is not stamped guaranteed, but we stand at the back of every yard of it. Ask for Cap-it-al, 75c yard.

SILK FOR COATS—Peau de Soie, 32 inches wide, bright and weighty, the kind that will stand alone, will not cut, suitable for either the natty eton or the 7/8 coat, $2.50 per yard. Faille, 44 in. wide, $3.50.

POLONAISE—This material is something new for linings, 42 in. wide, $1.25 yard.

BLACK and WHITE—Check's, Plaids and Stripes.

Miles of Laces.

We have had miles of new Laces come in under the reduced tariff from the old country. It means dollars and cents, much saving for our trade. The great volume of lace business will be done with Valenciennes laces. All sheer white fabrics are so popular that val. laces will be the chief trimming used. We have all of a dress the other day with about a quarter of a mile of lace on it. In our lace buying we try to avoid all coarse starched thread kinds. The new designs are very different and prettier than in previous seasons. To give you some idea of variety we show, may say that we have by actual count 495 patterns to choose from.

White Pattern Dress Robes Lace and Embroidery, $12.50 and $15.00.

We received from France four beautiful Pattern Dress Robes, white. All different designs and distinctly high class. The skirt part of robe is semi made. There is enough plain material, insertion and deep lace to make the waist. Remember only four of them. $12.50 and $15.00 each.

Tans, Golden Browns, Blacks and White Long Kid Gloves.

Nine costumes out of ten being made for Easter require long gloves. That long kid gloves will become scarce is what glove people predict. In colors the proper shades to buy are tans and golden browns. Whites and black are of course staple. If you are looking for Easter gifts, our complete stock of Kid Gloves will interest you.

New Belts are Very Pretty.

Many novelties this season in variations of silk, kid, leather, and washable belts. The eton jacket is the popular suit jacket shape of the day. That means more use for belts. One case devoted exclusively to showing the new belts. Any one of which would make a suitable Easter gift.

Our New Smallwear Case.

Our new smallwear case is a convenient reminder to the busy shopper. It contains eighty draws of little things that are needed every day in the home. Pins, Needles and Thimbles have to come up to our standard of values and quality before they receive draw space in our stock. Take Pins, for instance, we sell you the English Sovereign Pin, 300 pins with points to a paper for 3 cents, or two papers for 5 cents.

At 5 cents a paper we have made specially to our own order a solid brass pin, assorted lengths.

Our Needles are shape1 larger at centre than at eye. Make them sew easier. And so on through all the smallwears. Every detail looked after.

Black and White High Style for Spring 1907.

The Dry Goods Economist of New York, recognized as the best Dry Goods authority for the world, comes out this week and endorses Black and White as being the leading color style for Spring 1907.

Our buyers were fortunate enough to fore see the demand and are now ready with the goods. One of our windows will this week show you the designs that are considered best in Dress Goods and Silks.

HARDY—VANCE.

A very pretty but quiet wedding took place Wednesday afternoon, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. Vance, Centre Street, when their eldest daughter, Miss A. Gertrude, was married to Mr. William G. Vance, of Elmvale, Ontario. Only the relatives and a few intimate friends were present. The Rev. J. A. Dow, B.A., Greenwood, performed the ceremony of the bride, officiated. The bride was handsomely gowned in her travelling suit of navy blue trimmed with black military braid, and wore a white point d'esprit over taffeta, consisting of point lace and a very fine veil held with crown of silk, of chiffon and foliage, and carried a shower bouquet of white roses and lily of the valley. Little Helen Dow, of Greenwood, was the very attentive little flower girl—ring-bearer. She looked sweetly gay in white, with white bow sash, and carried a basket of lily of the valley. Miss Hazel Templeton played the wedding march, by request of the bride's sister. The groom's gift to the bride was a handsome brooch, to Miss Templeton, and Miss Hazel, whose heart pangs, and to the little ring-bearer, a gold pin with spray of lily of the valley in pearls. Mr. Hardy was one of Napanee's most popular young ladies, and will be greatly missed. The happy couple left the afternoon train for the west, followed by the good wishes, (and heaps of confetti and rice) of a host of friends. Among the friends from a distance were Mr. and Mrs. Hazel Mac Dunn, Greenwood; Mr. and Mrs. Gaverty, Mr. W. Furnivall, Mr. H. Georgi, Toronto; Mr. Jack Hardy, Mr. and Mrs. Corbett and Mr. Elmer Hardy, Kingston.

COW TESTING.

The dairy farmers of Canada are beginning to realize the importance of the question of the improvement of our dairy cows, and the possibilities there are in the line of work for increasing the profits in the milk production. According to the returns which have followed intelligent breeding and selective feeding, in other countries as well as in this country, it would appear that it is possible to increase the average production of Canadian herds by at least 2,000 pounds of milk per cow per year, by applying the same rational methods. Such an increase in production would mean an additional revenue from dairying to the farmers of Canada of at least $30,000,000 per year, besides increasing the number of cows kept. Any scheme which has for its object the improvement of our dairy stock must provide for a study of the performance of the individual cow, as well as deal with the management of the herd, including its care and feeding, and the rejection of animals to replace those which are discarded by the weeding process. Individuality can only be obtained by the weighing and testing of each cow's milk. It may be found that the dairies are responsible for more shirking than are the cows as ever, though the average of many herds has recently been raised as much as 10,000 to 12,000 pounds of milk per year. Every dairy farmer should attend the dairy meetings to be held in March 19th, at 2 o'clock, afternoon and evening, at Napanee, and Selby Town Hall, No. 2, at 7 o'clock, p.m., and at Odessa, No. 1, at Somerville, at Dalby Commissioner's office, Mr. Hall will tell how they can increase the cows tested free of charge.

BIBLE PORTRAIT ALBUM

BEARS MANY LIKENESSES TO MEN OF THE PRESENT DAY.

THEY ALL TEACH MANY LESSONS

There Are Saintly Faces, and Also a Rogue's Gallery of the Egyptian. Denounces the Pharisee—Technical Right, Is Sometimes Moral Wrong—Must Keep the Spirit and Not Letter of Christ's Teaching.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1906, by Frederick Dixon, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., March 10.—Dr. Talmage has begun in this sermon how true to life are the portraits in the Bible story and how common in our day are the identical faults and sins that characterized men in the time of Christ. The text is Luke xii, 1, "Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy."

The Bible may be compared to a family album. When you turn the sacred pages, the different faces you see there are like your own ancestors. They are men of another age and another land, but they are men like ourselves. Their faults and their good qualities are plainly described, and we see that they were such men as those we associate with to-day. Moses and Joshua and Gideon and David and Paul and Peter and Mary and Martha and Lazarus do not seem to be so much Jews as human beings like ourselves—not strangers, but your own flesh and blood. By their own mistakes and sins and failings and spiritual triumphs they are preaching their practical lessons. They seem to sit by your side and say: "My son, I would not live as you are living. I would not sin as you are sinning. The only true and happy life is the gospel life. I know your temptations by experience. There were black days in my life as there are in yours, but they were not dark days when I was following my own selfish will. When I surrendered my life to the divine will, there were no dark days. Try to live for Christ, my child. By my own sad history I want you to learn this lesson." Yes, the Bible pages are simply filled with pictures of those who are part of us, as you seem to be part of them.

But, though the Bible is a great photograph album with its hundreds of saintly faces pleading with us to be good, the Bible also has its rogue's gallery as well. There the fiendish faces are painted for our warning. There are Cain, the murderer; and Jezebel, the painted hag, whose bleeding carcass is being eaten by the dogs under the walls of Jesreel. There is the wearying corpse of Prime Minister Haman dangling from the hangman's noose which he had prepared for just Mordecai. There is the Babylonish banquet hall where Belshazzar and his intoxicated revelers were holding high carnival of death. There are the cruel face of bloody Herod and the demoniac visage of the unrepentant thief blaspheming Christ when they were both dying upon the cross. There is Judas the traitor, clutching the blood money for which he had sold his Master. These sinful faces are all there. They seem to be human lighthouses, flashing out their red lights over the stormy seas of life, warning us away from the fatal rocks upon which they have eternally foundered. Yes, the Bible seems to be crowded with two kinds of pictures. There we find the saints and the fiends. The pictures of the saints are pleasant with us to come and kneel at the foot of the cross. The fiends by their miserable fate are continually calling: "Beware, beware, beware!"

Among all the exorcised sinners of the Bible not any are more vehemently denounced by Christ than the Pharisees. In one place Christ compares them to the whited sepulchers filled with dead men's bones and all uncleanness. In another place Jesus compares these Pharisees to the woman who cleanses the outside of her cups and yet leaves the inside corrupt and filthy. In another place Christ describes a Pharisee and a publican praying in the temple. To the Pharisee God is turning a deaf ear. To the publican God is reaching out the hands of forgiveness and love. In another place Christ is comparing the Pharisee to a wolf crawling around in sheep's clothing. In my text he calls them hypocrites. In other words, these Pharisees may seem to have the face of a angel, but they have the claws of a tiger. Though they may seem to be the friends and helpers of mankind, yet everything they touch they pollute and destroy, as does the infectious hand of a leper. "Woe unto you scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made ye make him twofold more a child of hell than yourselves." This was Christ's idea of the Pharisees when he was upon earth. It is just as true a picture of the Pharisees to-day.

Now, why should the faces of the Pharisees always be found in the rogues' gallery of the Egyptian? Because, as a class, represented the brains and the wealth of the nation. They had among their representatives most of the social and political and ecclesiastical leaders. Many of these candidates were about to be inducted into their order. They had to take vows of piety and pledge themselves that they would give one-tenth of all their financial income to the church. They held most of the seats in the sanhedrim, yet here Christ is denouncing them as worse than thieves and murderers and social outcasts. Why is all this? Let us study their origin and then mark the spiritual degeneracy of the times, who were so carefully fair to look upon, but inwardly were as a writhing mass of decomposition.

First their origin. But what is the etymology of the word? Pharisee originally comes from the Hebrew word perushim or separatists. A Pharisee was a separatist. Parush means "to separate." A separator from what? They took their rise in the time of Jehoiakim, 600 years before Christ. Nebuchadnezzar, king of the Chaldeans, with his mighty army swarmed down westward and laid siege to and captured Jerusalem. As was the custom of that day, the princes and rulers of Hebrews were carried away from the land of their nativity. There, within the strong walls of old Babylon, they had to dwell. No temple had they. No priests to officiate. They were tempted by the sins of a heathen nation and under the shadow of the shrines of the idols, they had to do something to prevent their children becoming immoral idolaters. So what did they do? They withdrew themselves just as far as possible from associating with these sinful Babylonians. They did what the Puritans did when they were exiles in Holland. The Puritans arrived in the city of Leyden, which was to be their home for some years to come," wrote the author of "The Pilgrim Fathers of New England," "the exiles from Scrooby lived very much together, a community within a community, dwelling among a strange people." Thus was it with the Hebrews in the Babylonish exile. They existed as completely separate as possible. In order to keep their Hebrew religion pure and undefiled they became in a measure very narrow and bigoted and clannish. So far their motive in the start was altogether commendable. The Jew was a peculiar people. He could not reform the conditions around him, but he could register his protest against them by withdrawing himself from them. Not all the Jews of that time were willing to thus withdraw at the cost of obloquy and persecution and loss. Those who did withdraw were called separatists, or Pharisees. Though the Pharisees as a class were narrow and bigoted, they had their origin in the noblest motives of the race. They were first organized as a sect in order to protect their children's morals and the morals of their children.

I cannot illustrate my thought better than by the story of Daniel. While in old Jerusalem to the "wall of the place" of the Jews. It is one of the great sights for the Palestine visitor to see. Though Jerusalem has been under foreign dominion for centuries upon centuries, yet the intense patriotic Hebrews have not forgotten their race or their religion. They have not allowed to enter the Mohammedan mosque, which is built upon the site of the old temple, so they gather day after day at the foot of the walls where there are stones that once formed part of the temple. There they repeat over and over again the lamentations of the Seventy-ninth Psalm: "O God, the heathen are come into thine inheritance. Thy holy temple have they defiled. They have laid Jerusalem on heaps. We are become a reproach to our neighbors, a scorn and a derision to them that are roundabout us. How long, Lord? Will thou be angry forever?" Thus they stand day after day, year after year, month after month and year after century the weeping and wailing and praying and pleading go on. Thus did the exiled Hebrews become Pharisees or the separators of Babylon. Day after day, year after year, they pleaded with God to bring them back to their Jewish capital. "How long, O Lord," they cried. "How long must we live amid these licentious and idolatrous Babylonians? How long? How long? How long?" Then they would weep as they pleaded. And thus they refused to mingle with the Chaldean sinners. That we find that the great mass of the Pharisees was inspired by love for God, by love for purity and by love for the Jews' race.

Having explained the genesis of the Pharisees, let us study briefly their spiritual degeneracy. When God put forth the race and permitted them to return to Palestine, He must have been proud of the attitude they had taken. They had been faithful while many of their brethren did not, and they were proud of it. Now, spiritual pride is always a bad thing, and leads men into serious faults. If you preach the doctrine that the most important fact of a man's life is to live by a set of rules and regulations, though it be very ably cult for him, like a fancy person, to go strutting around bending backward. As he had separated from the idolatrous Chaldeans he now separated himself from his brethren and plumed himself on his obedience to the letter of the law. In order to keep separated from his fellows he said, "I will obey the law." Then he began to try to follow out the letter of the law to the neglect of the spirit of the law. Then he said, "I pay my tithes and I fast the days." So of purity and I obey the law of the Sabbath, why, I am a perfect man. Now, you know and I know that there is no set of laws ever made that the man who wants to do so cannot find a way to climb over or get the go around if you only give him time. Such was the case with the Pharisees.

The Pharisees said, "We obey the Bible." In order to bolster up the Bible they loaded it down with a lot of traditions and commentaries. These traditions were of men that had made the letter of the law dead. Here was a list of rules by which they were to wash their hands, another list of rules by which they were to wash their cups, a list of ceremonies by which they were to purify the temple, a list of rules by which they were to keep the Sabbath, a list of rules by which they were to tithe mint, anise and cummin. The Pharisee did not stop with the Bible. The Pharisee thought he must do more than that. He did do it! He took a small piece of the Bible, he placed it in front of his face, he placed it on the left arm. Then when he wanted to make a display of his religion he would open this doorstep and put it into his pocket and wear his way, carrying his doorstep with him. Then he would walk away from it. Then he would walk back to it. Then he would keep the letter of the Sabbath. He obeyed the letter of the law. He disobeyed the spirit of the law.

He stopped at the gate of truth, but he never entered in. He never found the sweet of error.

Then came the question: "If you know that I am only technically right and yet morally wrong. He may keep the law of the Sabbath to the letter and yet be as dishonest as any criminal behind iron bars wearing the stripes. So the Pharisees had many technicalities and were destitute of the spirit of the Hebrew laws. They climbed over the fences. They crawled through the loopholes of the law. They broke the laws of God just the same as the most ungodly citizens broke the laws of their country to-day. Then the phrisaical leaders began to grow, the rabbinical leaders did not think the Bible statements of what God would do literally. They were strict enough and full enough and explicit enough in their teachings. So these pharisaical leaders, or rabbis, year after year, century after century, began to lower the conscience to the Bible, which was not so much with the sanctions of the Bible as evasions of the Bible. They filled up their pages with commandments which God never intended to have forgotten. Moses and Joshua and Jeremiah and David and Ezekiel. Thus this Talmud is nothing more or less than the traditions or the oral sayings of the old rabbinical rabbis. It laid the Jews' what kind of clothes they were to wear on the Sabbath day, and how they were to tell their finger nails, and how they were to unite their hair. I am literally speaking the truth about the Talmud. It is filled with childish trivialities and with the greatest amount of unmitigated nonsense which was ever compounded between the covers of any book. So with our Bible to-day. The learned theologians have been at work. They have covered the leaves with a mass of traditions. They have evolved out of its pages a conglomerate mass of teachings which a ten-year-old child ought to have sense enough to see are not in them. And instead of our opening the leaves of our sacred Bible and reading the simple story of Jesus Christ and interpreting them as they ought to be interpreted we are hedging our sectarian churches around with the sayings of theologians that Christ would at once condemn if they were upon earth. The cardinal and essential doctrines taught in the Bible are two—the one, man is a sinner; the other, Christ is a Saviour. Let us study the Bible with these two ideas in our minds. Then we will find that the Bible will practice its spirit and not simply cling to the letter of the law? Will you do this no matter what problems of life you have to face? For instance, when a man lies about your and misrepresents you and says all manner of evil against you falsely, will you try to win that man's soul for Christ by the law of love and not by the law of hate? Will you obey the spirit of the Bible and not the letter of the Mosaic law? Will you show forgiveness to those who have done you a personal injury?

But there is a negative side to that subject as well as a positive. We must not disobey any of the commands God has given. We must not suppose that the gifts we make to Christ's cause or our regular attendance at church or our Bible reading or our prayers will cover over and atone for lying, stealing, cheating, living in any form of world, sins of business life and sins of the home must be repented of and renounced. The Pharisees were very particular about their beliefs that they said to have the law written on a very small form and compressed it into a small box, called a phylactery, and tied this box as a pledge of their orthodoxy and wore it as they went through the street that everybody could see it. So there are many church members who make a great parade of their orthodoxy and their Christian beliefs. But they are not honest in business and they are not true to God in their home relations, and they neglect their duties to God and do not devote themselves to prayer. When you confront them with the question, "Is that right?" they answer: "Other church members do it. Why should not I?" Are you absolutely willing to bear the mark of Christian integrity, no matter what other church members do or say?

Tell me honestly, are you serving God aright when you are in those progressive euchre parties? Are you serving him aright when you overreach a man in a horse trade? Are you serving him aright when you let the theatre or the dance hall count more than the prayer meeting? Are you serving him aright when you have wine on your table? Are you serving him to-day to say, "Some ministers and some church members do these things." The question for you to decide is, "Is it right for me to do them?" God does not judge us by what we think others do. God judges us by what we do ourselves.

"Well," you say, "if I cannot follow men and I must follow the Bible, will be hard to know many things before I become Paul the triumphant apostle. Take Christ as your guide. Follow Christ as the best you know how you do. If you are in doubt about any act, just pray to master, 'What would Jesus do in my place?' If you take Christ as your model and keep studying him and keep clinging to him, there is no doubt that you will come out all right. Oh, sinner, worried and anxious in the struggle of life, will thou take this sure and infallible guide? Will you follow Christ and fly by celestial companionship?

A SPRING NEED.

WEAK, TIRED AND DEPRESSED PEOPLE NEED A TONIC TO PUT THE BLOOD RIGHT.

Spring blood is bad blood. Indoor life and the close, warm air we are compelled to breathe, watery, impure food, the lack of exercise, all tend to thin the blood in spring just as much as the cold and raw winds of March try the vitality for the summer. It is then that bad blood shows itself in many ways. In some it breaks pimples and eruptions; in others it results through occasional headaches, weak eyes, sore throats, twinges of rheumatism, or a lack of energy, ambition and appetite to avoid exertion. For these spring troubles it is a loss to you not to take Hood's Sarsaparilla and it is impossible for us to over-estimate the worth of this old home medicine or always recommend them to ailing people.

But if you want new health you must get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, multiplies the red corpuscles in centuries. Other so-called pink pills are imitations. Be sure the full name Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all dealers or sent by mail post paid at 50 cents a box or 2.5 boxes for $1.00. Write the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

CATARRH GROWING LESS

DUE TO THE USE OF HYOMEI, CURES WITHOUT STOMACH DOSING.

Inquiry of the local drug stores shows that the sale of remedies for catarrh has decreased very much in the past year. Some catarrh cures which were formerly bought a great deal in time are now purchased by but a dozen lots and are rarely called for.

There is one notable exception to this decrease in sale, and that is Hyomei. The proprietors of this remedy sponsored for the decrease in sale of catarrh specifics, as it has made so many cures of catarrhal troubles that people have little need for the ordinary remedies for that disease.

People who have been trying different medicines for catarrh during many years have been induced to buy a bottle of Hyomei by the guarantee, that the remedy would not unless it cured. Much to their surprise, they found that Hyomei did all it claimed to do, if it did not it could not be sold under the guarantee and as a consequence became ardent advocates of the Hyomei cure.

There is no disagreeable stomach dosing with Hyomei. It is a vapor breathed through a small pocket inhaler, which comes with each outfit, and contains no drugs, nothing bottles, if needed, fifty cents.

All who should be able to supply you with Hyomei or if you prefer you can send to R. T. Booth, Buffalo, N.Y., and every druggist in the United States and Canada is authorized to refund the money unless it cures. Write to-day to-day and you will soon feel grateful for the good advice. When you get it, and return to us the empty bottle, you will be entitled to a full dollar's worth of Hyomei, which will give you the best cure and relief you ever had. Booth's Hyomei Co., Buffalo, N.Y.

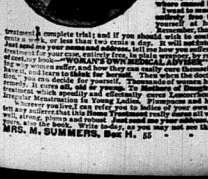
FREE TO YOU—MY SISTER



FREE TO YOU AND EVERY SISTER SUFFERER. A GIFT FROM A WOMAN'S HEART.
I am a woman.
I have had female suffering.
I have found the cure.
I will tell you the cure, free of charge, my home treatment with full directions, which will positively cure any woman's ailments. I want to tell all women about this cure. That is why I make this offer. I want my sister, your mother, or your sister. I want to tell all you have to cure yourself at home, without the help of a doctor. Most women call on doctors as a last resort, when they have become discouraged with patent medicines, we know better than any doctor. I know that 98 per cent of all female ailments are caused by displacements, inflammation and ulceration. Doctors call it Female Weakness, but we know it is not. Dragging down pains, backache, nervousness, irritability, hot flashes, dizziness, fainting spells, melancholy, blues, bearing down pains, creeping feeling, all tired out feeling, no ambition, variable appetite, sleeplessness, dark circles under eyes, pimples, all indicate some form of female trouble or disease. I have a written guarantee that my home treatment will cure any woman, young or old, rich or poor, no matter what her ailment is. I want to prove by what you can read, what my home treatment will do for you. I want you to write me at once for my home treatment, that it will cost you nothing to prove to you what it will do for you. I have cured thousands of cases in my own practice, many of them considered hopeless by doctors. I will cure you if you will only write me at once. Don't wait. Don't think of paying a dollar for something you can get for nothing. Don't think of sending a stamp for something you can get free. Don't write for a free sample, for I have no free samples. Don't write for a book, for I have no books. Don't write for anything but my home treatment, which I will send you free, prepaid, in plain wrapper, immediately upon receipt of your request. Don't write if you are not a sufferer, for I can only help those who suffer. Don't write if you are afraid to have your self cured at home, for I have cured thousands who were afraid. Don't write if you have not a spare moment, for my home treatment will cure you while you sleep. Don't write if you want something for nothing, for I have nothing for anybody who will not pay a fair price when cured. Don't write if you are not willing to pay the express agent $1.00 on delivery of treatment, for that is all I ask, and I will not take a penny more, even if you offer it. Don't write if you have no faith in God or man, for I have both, and can cure you. Don't write if you are not a woman, for I can only help women

MORVEN.

A large number of our citizens attended the opening services of our new Trinity church in Napanee, on Sunday last, and also Dr. Ussher's two following pupils. There was no service in our church on Sunday, so we all had an opportunity to go and hear Rev. Mr. Rankin.

We are sorry to report the death of one of our most widely known and highly respected citizens, in the person of John Josylin, who passed away on Sunday last, after a severe illness. The funeral took place at the Wilton church, on Wednesday last. The sincere sympathy of the whole community goes out to the bereaved wife and few small boys, who are left to mourn her loss.

There is still a considerable amount of sickness in our midst. Mrs. Wm. Purcell and Mrs. Marshall Brought-on have been very ill, and are now progressing nicely.

Mr. Shepherd Mallett and family moved in our midst on Monday last. We welcome them to our village, and hope we see the return of old friends, who have left us.

We are already hoping to meet the cheery Yankeedoodle, who started in the village last week, and left for parts unknown. We wish them very success.

BURGESS—HICKS.

One of those pleasing little events took place at the home of Mr. Daniel Burgess, Palace Road, on Wednesday, March 13th, when their daughter, Miss Muriel Alice, and Mr. Charles Lewis Hicks, of Deseronto, N.Y., were joined together in the bonds of matrimony by the Rev. J. H. Reid, in the presence of the immediate friends. The bride was a travelling suit of light grey tweed and white silk blouse, and was unattended. The ceremony was performed at the hour of six o'clock, after which a supper was served. The bride received many handsome and useful presents, among them a very handsome clock from the groom. Also some handsome table linen from The Robinson Co. millinery department, of which she was an employee for our store, &c., and Mr. Hicks left on the 8.11 train for a short trip west, and on their return, after visiting Mr. Hicks' parents at Maneow, for a few days, they will go to Dover, N.Y., where they will reside. The best wishes and congratulations of their many friends go with them.

SPEECHLESS AND PARALYZED.—"I had nervous disease of the heart," writes Mrs. J. S. Goode, of Truro, N. S. "I suffered terribly and was often speechless and partially paralyzed. One dose of Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart gave me relief, and before I finished one bottle I was able to go about. To-day I am a well woman." 45. Sold by T. B. Wallace.

GONE TO REST.

The subject of this sketch, Marjorie Jane Baird, the beloved wife of James Joyce, of North Fredericksburgh, departed this life in great peace, on Sunday March 10th, 1907. Her ancestors were numbered among the pioneers of this old historic County, her father having been Samuel Hicks, and her revered mother's maiden name was Cynthia Mallory, both of whom have long since crossed the bourne. The deceased was born in Ernestown, now the village of Bath, in the year 1829, and had she lived sixteen days longer she would have attained her 78th year. She was married to her late sorrowing husband on April 2d, 1850. She they lived in happy wedded life for nearly 57 years. Their union was blessed with four sons and three daughters, who all survive and rise up to call their sainted mother blessed. The honored sons are Samuel James, William, John M. and Sheldon. The devoted daughters are Mrs. Rev. T. H. Richard, Mrs. T. A. Peters, and has been for some years a widow, and Mrs. Partwright, Harwood. Our esteemed friend was converted to God in early life, under the ministry of Rev. Sheldon Young of sacred memory. She united in fellowship with the M. E. church at Bethany after her conversion, and was loyal and devoted member of the Association on the Bay circuit, when Rev. Lord and Major Ferrell, "Ph. D." were her circuit rider. There never was a special entertainment to be enjoyed in the church of her choice, in which she did not have a hand, and the various means of grace were to her a cherished delight. She was visited with a slight stroke some four years ago, from the effects of which she never recovered. About mid-summer she was taken worse and gradually wasted away until she quietly fell asleep in Jesus, on the last hour of the busy Sabbath, the day she loved so well. She has gone to be where her much loved Sabbath days will never rank. The funeral, which took place on Wednesday, March 13th, was large and representative. A very touching and effective memorial service was held in the Anderson Methodist church at 1.30 p.m. The church was beautifully draped and decorated, the floral display being very fine. Her pastor, Rev. J. W. Dowe, preached a sermon of great pathos and power, from the text: I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me though he were dead yet shall he live again: all the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come." Her remains will rest in the cemetery of the advent at Morven, until we all a part in the first resurrection.—Com.

SHADOWS OF THE PAST.

Though Lincoln J. Carter's successful drama, "Shadows of the Past," in its stage setting, is not quite so imposing in the usual sense of the word, in that it depends for its strength on motions of scenery and properties, yet the background against which the story is laid is unusually picturesque. The action of the play ranges from New England to Belgium, and then back to the border Scotland. The scenes showing the famous bull tower in Bruges and a flower garden-covered lodge in Scotland, are two of the most artistic sets of theatrical decoration art exhibited on the road this season. Shadows of the Past will be seen at the Bijou Opera House, Friday, 21st March.

A JOLLY LOAD.

A popular sleigh load of fourteen, Mr. and Mrs. Howley, Harrington and Hall, made a flying visit to Mrs. C. Howard's, on Amherst Island, on Wednesday evening last. The party was duly conducted by Mr. Charles Hunter, who provided the spacious and well-filled ox sleigh, and who also had the position of driver. Mr. Wes. Orser, of Hambourg, acted as assistant and referee. The party "outed" all the village of Bath and a few farms and were sorely taxed to find room for the load. When Deseronto was reached the party "outed" again, and all were served with refreshments at the hotel. Mr. Hunter's team was then indulged in. In the region of the west some hours of the morning, the party were ushered into the dancing room, where a well filled table greeted the onlookers. The inner man and woman then were nurtured on until time for departing came, when the ox sleigh were pulled to their hostess. Only every inch the cast day told the tale of the preceding night's entertainment, and the party one and all generally agreed that a more enjoyable time was never spent on Amherst Island.

PRESENTATION AND ADDRESS.

A pleasant event took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. R. Ferris, Mount Pleasant, on Monday evening, March 11th, when about twenty-five of the youngsters gathered together to bid their son Frank goodbye, it being the eve of Frank's departure for Belleville, where he intends to study. A social evening was spent, and after partaking of a bountiful tea, an address was read by Miss A. Close, while Mr. H. Abrams presented Cornet Frank with a gold handled silk umbrella.

To Frank Davis:

It is with the sincerest regret that we, the young people, learn of your intended departure, from our community. Desirous of expressing some tangible proof of our esteem and respect, we have gathered here tonight to extend a parting hand. You will do greatly missed from our midst and were rightly named a "jolly good fellow." You will ever remember us for your cordiality and ever readiness to help us on every undertaking whether for fun or otherwise. We shall remember and pray God may prosper you in your future career. We hope you will ever remember this as a piece of pleasant memory, and if kind Providence orders your path again, you will find us ever as warm-hearted. You carry with you the best wishes of us all for your future success in your new life. Let your motto be "Onward and Upward," and always keeping in view the fact that there is no use to discipline, but to attain.

Signed as a mark of respect and slight token of esteem we ask you to accept this umbrella as a parting gift from your friends.

Signed in behalf of the young people of Mount Pleasant.

MISS ALMA CLINE,
MR. M. ABRAMS.

Frank replied in a few well fitting and chosen remarks, thanking them all for the gift and the kind thoughts and wishes. The rest of the evening was spent in games and singing, closing with a hearty hand shake and goodbye, the party dispersed to their several homes.

Bogart have purchased Lady Bath, 8th, 12,000 pound Lady Bath, 8th, 12,000 pound cow, and the grand Jersey bull, Pogis Pride, 24261, Dam, Pogis Lady 11th, 20,000 pound cow, and the grand Jersey cow, at the Pan-American exhibition. Messrs. Bogart have also purchased the result of breeding Jersey cattle since 1880, and have one of the finest herd of cattle at the Pleasant View Jersey Stock Farm. As I retire from the stock and dairy business in Prince Edward, I am glad to do so to residence at Pretty Valley, Sask., I take this opportunity of asking a few to secure the valuable herd of Jersey cattle, and I feel sure they will do credit themselves in their new home at Pleasant View Farm. I wish Messrs. Bogart success in their new venture, and trust they will be a benefit to the community of Bath.

Zutoo, the Japanese headache cure, is positive.

Don't, without a trial, condemn it as something that will hurt you.

Taken when you suspect a headache, it will ward it off. Taken later it will cure the headache in twenty minutes. In every case it will leave you feeling good. It is harmless as the soda which is one of its ingredients.

If it does not do all that is claimed for it, we discard it. But don't condemn it with the dying curse and condemn it without a trial. That isn't fair to

Indigestion

Stomach trouble is but a symptom of, and not in itself a true disease. We think of Dyspepsia, Heartburn, and Indigestion as real diseases, yet they are symptoms only of a certain specific Nerve sickness—nothing else.

It was this fact that first correctly led Dr. Shoop in the creation of that now very popular Stomach Remedy—Dr. Shoop's Restorative. Going direct to the stomach nerves, alone brought that success and favor to Dr. Shoop and his Restorative. Without that original and highly vital principle, no such lasting accomplishments were ever to be had.

For stomach distress, bloating, biliousness, bad breath and sallow complexion, try Dr. Shoop's Restorative—Tablets or Liquid—and see for yourself what it can and will do. We sell and cheerfully recommend

THE HOUND OF THE BASKERVILLES

BY A. CONAN DOYLE.

Author of "The Green Flag" and "The Great Boer War."

"It certainly did cross my mind that it might be a little dull—less for you, perhaps, than for your humble servant."

"No, no, I am never dull," said she, quickly.

"We have books, we have our similes, and we have interesting neighbors. Dr. Mortimer is a most learned man in his own line. Poor Sir Charles was also an admirable companion. We knew him well, and miss him more than I can tell. Do you think that I should intrude if I were to call this afternoon and make the acquaintance of Sir Henry?"

"I am sure that he would be delighted."

"Then perhaps you would mention that I propose to do so. We may in our humble way do something to make things more easy for him until he becomes accustomed to his new surroundings. Will you come upstairs, Dr. Watson, and inspect my collection of lepidoptera? I think it is the most complete one in the south-west of England. By the time that you have looked through them lunch will be almost ready."

But I was eager to get back to my charge. The melancholy of the moor, the death of the unfortunate pony, the weird sound which had been associated with the grim legend of the Baskervilles, all these things tinged my thoughts with sadness. Then on the top of these more or less vague impressions there had come the definite and distinct warning of Miss Stapleton, delivered with such intense earnestness that I could not doubt that some grave and deep reason lay behind it. I resolved all pressure to stay for lunch, and I set off at once upon my return journey, taking the grass-grown path by which we had come.

It seems, however, that there must have been some short cut for those who knew the ways, for I had reached the road I was astounded to see Miss Stapleton sitting upon a rock by the side of the track. Her face was beautifully flushed with her exertions, and she held her hand to her side.

"I have run all the way in order to cut you off, Dr. Watson," said she. "I had not even time to put on my hat. I must not stop, or my brother may miss me. I wanted to say to you how sorry I am about the stupid mistake I made in thinking that you were Sir Henry. Please forget the words I said, which have no application whatever to you."

"But I can't forget them, Miss Stapleton," said I. "I am Sir Henry's friend, and his welfare is a very close concern of mine. Tell me why it was that you were so eager that Sir Henry should return to London."

"A woman's whim, Dr. Watson. When you know me better you will understand that I cannot always give reasons for what I say or do."

"No, no. I remember the thrill in your voice. I remember the look in your eyes. Please, please, be frank with me. Miss Stapleton, for ever since I have been here I have been conscious of shadows all round me. Life has become like that great Grimpen Mire, with little green patches everywhere into which one may sink and with no guide to point the track. Tell me then what it was that you meant, and I will promise to convey your warning to Sir Henry."

An expression of irresolution passed for an instant over her face, but her eyes had hardened again when she answered me.

"You make too much of it, Dr. Watson," said she. "My brother and I were very much shocked by the death of Sir Charles. We knew him well, and ultimately, for his favorite walk was over the moor to our house. He was deeply impressed with the curse which hung over his family, and when this tragedy came I naturally felt that there must be some grounds for the fears which he had expressed. I was distressed therefore when another member of the family came down to live here, and I felt that he should be warned of the danger which he will run. That was all which I intended to convey."

"But what is the danger?"

"You know the story of the hound?"

"I do not believe in such nonsense."

"But I do. If you have any influence with Sir Henry, take him away from a place which has always been fatal to his family. The world is wide. Why should he wish to live at the place of danger?"

"Because it is the place of danger. That is Sir Henry's nature. I fear that unless you can give me some more definite information than this it would be impossible to get him to move."

"I cannot say anything definite, for I do not know anything definite."

"I would ask you one more question, Miss Stapleton. If you meant to warn me than this when you first spoke to me, why should you not wish your brother to overhear what you said? There is nothing in which he, or anyone else, could object."

"My brother is very anxious to have the Hall inhabited, for he thinks that it is for the good of the people to live on the moor. He would be very angry if he knew that I had said anything which might induce Sir Henry to go away. But I have done my duty now and I will say no more. I must get back, or he will miss me and suspect that I have seen you. Good-bye!" She turned, and had disappeared in a few minutes among the scattered boulders, while I, with my soul full of vague fears, pursued my way to Baskerville Hall.

From this point onwards I will follow the course of events by transcribing my own letters to Miss Mortimer, which lie before me on the table. One page is missing, but otherwise they are exactly as written, and show my feelings and suspicions of the moment more accurately than my memory, clear as it is upon these tragic events, can possibly do.

Baskerville Hall, October 13th.

My Dear Holmes,—My previous letters and telegrams have kept you pretty well up-to-date as to all that has occurred in this most God-forsaken corner of the world. The longer one stays here the more does the spell of the moor sink into one's soul, its vastness, and also its grim charm. When you are once out upon its bosom you have left all traces of modern England behind you, but on the other hand you are conscious everywhere of the homes and the work of the prehistoric people. On all sides of you as you walk are the houses of these forgotten folk, with their graves and the huge monoliths which are supposed to have marked their temples. As you look at the grey stone huts against the neutral hill-sides you leave your own age be-kind you, and if you were to see a stalwart, burly man crawl out from the low door, biting a flint-tipped arrow on to the string of his bow, you would feel that a few centuries more or less were natural than your own. The strange thing is that they should have lived so thickly on what must always have been most unfruitful soil. I am no antiquarian, but I could imagine that they were some nomadic and hunted race who were forced to accept that which none other would accept.

All this, however, is foreign to the mission on which you sent me, and will probably be very uninteresting to your severely practical mind. I can still remember your complete indifference as to whether the sun moved round the earth or the earth round the sun. Let me, therefore, return to the facts concerning Sir Henry Baskerville.

If you have not had any report within the last few days it is because up to to-day there was nothing of importance to relate. Then a very unexpected circumstance occurred, which I shall tell you in due course. But, first of all, I must keep you in touch with some of the other factors in the situation.

One of these factors is the escape which I have said little, is the escaped convict upon the moor. There is strong reason now to believe that he has got right away, which is a considerable relief to the lonely householders of this district. A fortnight has passed since his flight, during which he has not been seen and nothing has been heard of him. It is surely inconceivable that he could have held out upon the moor during all that time. Of course, so far as his concealment goes there is no difficulty at all. Any one of these stone huts would give him a hiding-place. But there is nothing to eat unless he can get to a lonely house, and one has only to keep watch in order to see that no food is taken to any such house. Altogether, I think that we may take it that the unfortunate man is out of the question. Cartwright and his assistant have given up their search and returned to their quarters.

Linens for Easter and Wedding Gifts.

The gift of a pretty piece of hand embroidered linen lores scarcely any of the significance of friendship because the hand of the giver did not do the embroidering. Not all can do it. And right here this linen store steps in with the helpfulness of its abundance of beautiful fancy linens and all the work and expenditure of time skipped on the part of the donor. Come and see and enjoy display on Saturday night. Just studying our stocks of linens is sufficient to make one a lover of them.

It would not be like Easter without a new pair of Gloves. If you want kid, buy tans, golden brown, white or black. These are shades that look well with most costumes and stand the wear test. March 31st (Easter Sunday) is too early for fabric gloves, so better secure your long gloves while size assortments are here.

"Old Bleach" Art Linens for Embroidery and Drawn Work.

Are made of selected Irish yarns of high quality, and being bleached on the grass and finished soft without starch or other filling matter, the threads are strong, and at the same time smooth and free running. Another advantage they possess is that the needle passes through without becoming sticky, and thread without becoming puckered.

The trade mark "Old Bleach" is stamped on every yard.

For Decorative Embroidery and Drawn Thread Work, "Old Bleach" make a linen of fine and coarse quality, in which the threads of warp and weft are identical. In drawing linen woven in the ordinary way, the squares left by the pulled threads are not in reality equilateral or square, unless more threads of the weft are pulled out than those of the warp. This makes a difficulty for the drawn-thread embroiderer, which "Old-Bleach" linens remove. Moreover, there is no trouble in drawing threads; they pull out like threads of raw silk, smooth and unbroken.

Old Bleach Linens is another good line that we have the output of for Napanee. By the way did you ever buy "Old Bleach" towels? If not, see them.

Easter Neckwear and Belts.

Lovers of fine neckwear and belts will be delighted with the Easter novelties. Every piece we show from a 5 cent turnover to the most expensive novelty is confined to us for this district. That's way the nowelties we show are so different and not found in every village along the line.

DRAMATIC LIFE STORY

OF CENTURION WHO PAID TRIBUTE TO CHRIST'S DIVINITY.

SOME LESSONS WE MAY LEARN

Jesus the Absorbing Figure in the Crucifixion—Some Facts of Roman History—In Darkest Times of Sin and Wickedness Many Stood Up Boldly For the Right — Overcame Evil With Good.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1907, by Frederick Dixon, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., March 17.—In this sermon the preacher outlines in imagination the dramatic story of a character of the time of Christ whose experience has a remarkable interest for the people of to-day. The text is Matthew xxvii, 54, "Truly this, was the Son of God."

No picture of the crucifixion is perfect unless the face of Jesus Christ is the centre and the absorbing theme. All other parts of the picture must converge toward that divine face or radiate from it even as the spokes of the wheel branch out from the hub. There may be three crosses, but Jesus' cross must be the central cross. There may be soldiers there gambling for a prize, but that prize must be the garments of Jesus Christ.

But, though we would not for one instant turn your chief thought of the crucifixion from our Divine Lord, yet in order to bring Christ's saving sacrifice a little closer you would this morning have you watch the upturned face of a Roman soldier who is standing at the foot of the cross and with outstretched arms is uttering the words of my text. Who is this centurion? Where did he come from? What was his past life? Why was he led to believe in the divinity of our Master and King? These are questions which I would like to answer in an imaginative way, for in all the Bible we do not read one word about him except that he was a captain of a petty line officer in the Roman army and that he was detailed by his superior officer to see that Christ was executed according to the Roman law. And yet in an imaginative way I believe we can read between the lines and trace this centurion's life step by step from his cradle to his spiritual surrender at the foot of the cross, where before we can all gathered to worship our dying Lord.

In the first place, I imagine that this centurion was born in Italy. That youth who was born amid the pure, sweet, wholesome country life of old Italy. By that I do not mean he came of an ignorant, poverty stricken family, but I believe he was one of an Italian landowning family which had neither gained the wealth nor lost the purity in domestic life, refinement of home associations and had all which was possible in a Southern land to make life pure and sweet and wholesome.

It is a very grave mistake to suppose that rural Italy in the time of Augustus was like immoral Rome. You can no more judge the country life of Italy by the moral standards of the social life of Caesar's court than you can judge the moral standards of Paris or the purity of that for a time he was not responsible for what he said or did. He was very sorry for all that had passed, and he recognized, how foolish and how selfish it was that he should imagine that he could hold a beautiful woman like his sister to himself for her whole life. If she had to leave him he had rather it was to a neighbor like Jack Sinclair to anyone else. But in any case it was a blow to him, and it would take him some time before he could prepare himself to meet it. He would withdraw all opposition upon his part if I would promise for three months to let the matter rest and to be content with only visiting the lady's friendship during that time without claiming her love. This I promised, and so the matter rests."

So there is one of our small mysteries cleared up. It is something to have touched bottom anywhere in his bog in which we are floundering. We know now why Stapleton looked with disfavor upon his sister's suitor—even when that suitor was so eligible a one as Sir Henry. And now I pass on to another thread which I have extricated out of the tangled skein, the mystery of the note in the well-known illustrated face of Mrs. Barrymore, of the secret journey of the butler to the western lattice window. Congratulate me, my dear Holmes, and tell me that. I have actually established for once an agent—that you do not regret the confidence which you showed in me when you sent me down. All these things have by one night's work been thoroughly cleared.

I have said "by one night's work," for on the first we were entirely baffled. I sat up with Sir Henry in his room until nearly three o'clock in the morning, but no sound of any sort did we hear except the chiming clock upon the stairs. My companion had fallen into a heavy sleep, and I had myself begun to nod, when I suddenly sprang wide awake, and realized that I had dropped my cigar upon my knee and that the room was filled with smoke. Sir Henry was quite unconscious that anything was amiss, and it took me some time before I could awaken him and get the smell of tobacco out of the air. Then we both settled down in our chairs with our revolvers ready, and waited for events.

They were not long in coming. Suddenly, out of the silence there sprang the strange cry which I had already heard twice in my life, once from the moor-side and once from the window of my room in London. Like the first, it was a wild scream, but it was prolonged into a dreadful shuddering moan. Even my companion, who had never heard it before, sat up straight in his chair and stared with a face of horror into the darkness. I had risen, and so had he, and I was conscious that his hand was upon my arm, but I was unaware of it until I felt my own grip tighten in response. Then we stood together, straining our ears, but the cry had died away, and nothing broke the heavy silence of the night.

"My God, what's that, Watson?" he whispered.

I could hear by the tremor in his voice that he was not quite master of his nerves.

"I don't know. It's a hound of the moor. I heard it once before."

"It's the folk on the country-side!"

"Oh, they are ignorant people. Why should you fancy that it is anything supernatural?"

"You were shaken by it as much as I was."

"Well, I am not ashamed to confess that I was upset by it. Let us go out and see what it is."

I hesitated, but could not escape the question.

"They say it is the cry of the Hound of the Baskervilles."

He groaned, and was silent for a moment.

"A hound it was," he said, at last, "but it seemed to me to come from miles away, over yonder, I think."

"It was hard to say whence it came."

"It rose and fell with the wind. Isn't that the direction of the great Grimpen Mire?"

"Yes, it is."

"Well, it was up there. Come now, Watson, didn't you think yourself that it was the cry of a hound? I am not a child. You need not fear to speak the truth."

"Stapleton was with me when I heard it last. He said that it might be the calling of a strange bird."

"No, no, it was a hound. My God, can there be some truth in all these stories? Is it possible that I am really in danger from a dog and a ghost? You don't believe it, do you, Watson?"

"No, no."

"And yet it was one thing to laugh about it in London, and it is another to stand out here in the dark silence of the moor and to hear such a cry as that. And my uncle! There was the footprint of the hound beside him as he lay. It all fits together. I don't think that I am a coward, Watson, but that sound seemed to freeze my very blood. Feel my hand!"

It was as cold as a block of marble.

"You'll be all right to-morrow."

"I don't think I'll get that cry out of my head. What do you advise that we do now?"

"Shall we turn back?"

"No, by thunder; we have come to get our own back, and we will not return to-night. Now that we have fairly started I for one mean to go through with it. Let us see it to the end, whatever may befall."

Slowly and with many stops and starts we made our way down the long path. Every dip in the ground, every turn in the track, revealed some possible source of peril; but all was vacant and silent save for the chirping of the crickets and the croaking of the frogs in the distant marshes. Once a pack of wild mountain ponies clattered down the path in front of us, but these were not the only living things which had been roused by our expedition. Far away on our left we heard the deep baying of a hound, which was answered by another still farther off, and then another, until the whole night was filled with the music of it. Long and dismal it sounded, passing slowly from one end to the other of the great circle of the moor. Never before had I known how full of life was the desolate plain which surrounded us.

"My God, what's that, Watson?"

From the scaffold; but to me, sir, he was always the little curly-headed boy who sat opposite me at the dinner-table, and an elder sister would. That was why he broke prison, sir. He knew that I would not refuse to help him, and I was not free to help him. When he dragged himself here one night, raving with fever, starving, with the warders hard at his heels, what could we do? We took him in and we fed him and we cared for him. Then you returned, sir, and my brother thought he would be safer on the moor than anywhere else until the hue and cry was over, so he lay in hiding there. But every second night we made sure if he was still there by putting a light in the window, and if there was an answer my husband took out some bread and meat to him. Every day we hoped that he was gone, but as long as he was there we could not desert him. That is the whole truth, sir, and as an honest Christian woman, and you will see that if there is blame in the matter it does not lie with my husband, but with me, for whose sake he has done all that he has."

The woman's words came with an intense earnestness which carried conviction with them.

"Is this trbe, Barrymore?"

"Yes, Sir Henry. Every word of it."

"Well, I cannot blame you for standing by your own wife. Forget what I have said. Go to your room, and you, and we shall talk further about this matter in the morning."

When they were gone we looked out of the window again. Sir Henry had opened it, and the cold night wind beat in upon our faces. Far away in the black distance there still glowed that one single point of yellow light.

"I wonder he dares," said Sir Henry, "so near to be so placed as to be only visible from here."

"Very likely. How far do you think it is?"

"Out by the Cleft Tor, I think."

"Not more than a mile or two off."

"Hardly that."

"Well, it cannot be far if Barrymore had to carry out the food to it. It is for he is waiting, this villain, beside that candle. By thunder, Watson, I am going out to take that man!"

The same thought had crossed my own mind. It was not as if Barrymore had taken us into their confidence. Their secret had been forced from them. The man was a danger to the community, an unmitigated scoundrel for whom there was neither pity nor excuse. We were only doing our duty in taking this chance of putting him back where he might be no harm. With his brutal and violent nature, others would have to pay for the sins if we held our hands. Any night, for example, our neighbors the Stapletons might be attacked by him. I say that I have been the thought of this which made Sir Henry so keen upon the adventure.

"I will come," said I.

"Then get your revolver and put on your boots. The sooner we start the better, as the fellow may put out his light and be off."

In five minutes we were outside the door, taking upon our expedition. We hurried through the dark shrubbery, amid the creaking of the autumn wind and the rustle of the falling leaves. The night air was heavy with the smell of rain and it was very dark, and again the moon peeped out, for an instant, between the broken clouds. We stopped and sat panting on two rocks to watch the solitary light gleaming in the distance.

And it was at this moment that there occurred a most strange and unexpected thing. We had risen from our rocks and were turning to go home, having abandoned the case as hopeless, when the moon was low upon the right, and the figure of a man appeared between us and it. We shall take him by surprise and have him at our mercy before he can resist."

"I say, Watson," said the baronet, "what would Holmes say to this? How about that hour of darkness in which the power of evil is supreme?"

As if in answer to his words there rose suddenly out of the vast gloom of the moor that strange cry which I had already heard upon the borders of the Great Grimpen Mire. It came with the wind through the silence of the night, a long, deep mutter, then a rising howl, and then the sad moan in which it died away. Again and again it sounded, filling the whole air with vibrations of sorrow and despair. Even my companion gripped me by the sleeve and his face glimmered white through the darkness.

"My God, what's that, Watson?" he cried.

"I don't know. It's a hound of the moor. I heard it once before."

He did sway, and an absolute silence closed in upon us. We stood straining our ears, but nothing came.

"Watson," said the baronet, "it was the cry of a hound."

My blood was cold in my veins, for there was a break in his voice which told of the sudden horror which had seized him.

"What do they call this sound?" he asked.

"Who?"

"The folk on the country-side?"

"Oh, they are ignorant people. Why should you attach importance to what they say?"

"Tell me, Watson. What do they say of it?"

I hesitated, but could not escape the question.

"They say it is the cry of the Hound of the Baskervilles."

He groaned, and was silent for a few moments.

"A hound it was," he said, at last, "but it seemed to come from miles away, over yonder, I think."

"It was hard to say whence it came."

"Well, it cannot be far if Barrymore had to carry out the food to it. And he is waiting, this villain, beside that candle. By thunder, Watson, I am going out to take that man!"

The same thought had crossed my own mind. It was not as if Barrymore had taken us into their confidence. Their secret had been forced from them. The man was a danger to the community, an unmitigated scoundrel for whom there was neither pity nor excuse. We were only doing our duty in taking this chance of putting him back where he might be no harm. With his brutal and violent nature, others would have to pay for the sins if we held our hands. Any night, for example, our neighbors the Stapletons might be attacked by him. I say that I have been the thought of this which made Sir Henry so keen upon the adventure.

"I will come," said I.

"Then get your revolver and put on your boots. The sooner we start the better, as the fellow may put out his light and be off."

In five minutes we were outside the door, taking upon our expedition. We hurried through the dark shrubbery, amid the creaking of the autumn wind and the rustle of the falling leaves. The night air was heavy with the smell of rain and it was very dark, and again the moon peeped out, for an instant, between the broken clouds. We stopped and sat panting on two rocks to watch the solitary light gleaming in the distance.

And it was at this moment that there occurred a most strange and unexpected thing. We had risen from our rocks and were turning to go home, having abandoned the case as hopeless, when the moon was low upon the right, and the figure of a man appeared between us and it. We shall take him by surprise and have him at our mercy before he can resist."

"I say, Watson," said the baronet, "what would Holmes say to this? How about that hour of darkness in which the power of evil is supreme?"

As if in answer to his words there rose suddenly out of the vast gloom of the moor that strange cry to

LOCAL BETTERMENT.

How and When to Start a Neighborhood Improvement Society.

This is the season of the year when societies for neighborhood improvement are in order, says a correspondent of Outing. If you have no such society, why not organize one at once? Get it under motion and plan for next season's work. There are always improvements to be made. No society of which I have any knowledge has ever exhausted the possibilities in this direction. The more you do the more you see to do, for work is always to be found when you look for it, and the march of improvement may go on indefinitely. There has been a great deal done along this line in many parts of the country, and an organization for local work ought to receive hearty encouragement in every neighborhood.

Such a society can be made extremely interesting during the winter season. It need not be confined to the bare discussion of what shall be done and how it shall be done, but every session may be made generally interesting by the preparation of papers on various topics, readings from standard authors, music and elocutionary exercises.

The secret of success in an organization of this kind consists in arousing general interest, and in no way can this be done more effectively than by inducing everybody to take an active part in its meetings. Let cooperation be the watchword. Give every member to understand from the start that the price of individual amusement is an effort to do something to amuse others.

Put the matter of neighborhood improvement into the hands of men of good taste, good judgment and practical ability to carry out fully whatever is undertaken. It is a good plan to have sub-committees for business it shall be to see that this, that or the other thing is done in their respective localities. If there are several such committees each one will doubtless make an effort to outdo the other, and rivalry of this sort is always stimulatingly helpful. It is advisable to give practical, progressive women charge of the improvements to be made on church and school grounds. They will do this work better than men will usually. If trees and shrubs are to be planted, put a man on the committee to do the heavier part of the work.

Premier McBride.

Hon. Richard McBride, whose Government in British Columbia has been given a new lease of life by the recent Provincial elections, is the youngest of the Canadian Premiers. He is a native of the Canadian Northwest, having been born at New Westminster in 1870, where his father, a north of Ireland man, was for many years Governor of the prison. When fourteen years of age young McBride entered Dalhousie University, Halifax, and in four years obtained his M.L.B. Returning immediately to the west, he devoted two years to reading law and was called to the British Columbia Bar in 1892. For a time he practised with a New Westminster firm, and then branched out for himself, becoming head of the firm of McBride & Kendall. His first appearance in the political arena was in the general elections of 1898, when he unsuccessfully contested New Westminster against Mr. Aulay Morrison. Two years later he was more fortunate, and in the Provincial elections was returned as member for Dewdney. He supported the Turner Ministry, and after two years was called to the Cabinet as Minister of Mines. In 1901, however, he resigned to show his disapproval of the Dunsmuir-Martin coalition. He fought the coalition strenuously and became almost at once leader of the Provincial Conservative party, which he has now a second time guided to victory.

Stay on the Farm.

Charles P. Raymond, in Raymond's Record, Oakville: They tell me that you are thinking of leaving the farm this spring. Don't do it; keep close to the soil. You are tired feeding the cattle, the sheep and the pigs, tired of chopping the wood, tired of cleaning the stable out, tired of the cares in the corner-cupboard, eh? You have visited the city, and its roar fascinated you. Everyone seemed more dressed and happy, and the laughter and conversation of the passers-by more music to your ear, so with the farm, for it is a healthy spot to live on, where you get a complexion from nature's brush, and an appetite strong in God's gymnasium, where you need no medicine to make you eat. Stay with the farm, where life is natural and friendships more real, where you can have what you want when you want, and there is none who will criticise. Stay with the farm, with its spirit of trust and friendliness, from the collie who follows you up and down the line to the swallow who builds in the barn.

A Noted Basso's Egotism.

Once in London were four great basses singing at the same time, Lablache, Marini, Staudigl and Karl Formes. Fashionable opinion was undecided as to which of the four was the greatest, and finally the members of a leading club determined to have the quartette of singers interviewed separately by one of the members to find out to whom each of the singers awarded the palm of being the greatest bass then in London.

Staudigl answered promptly and truthfully: "Lablache is the best."

Marini replied, "I will not say who is the first bass, but I am sure Lablache is the second."

Lablache modestly responded, "If Staudigl were not here, I certainly would claim the lead."

Formes without hesitation instantly said, "The greatest basso, sir—that's me, Karl Formes."

252 In Quebec Family.

The other day an Ormston, Que hog buyer, Peter Cavers, loaded 125 hogs, and among the number one tipped the scales at 540 pounds. This animal came from the farm of Mr. John Geddes, was thirteen years old, and has raised 14 litters, which totaled 252 pigs. This is surely a record breaker.

Golf From a New View Point.

An English exchange vouches for the following as a true report of a Frenchman's idea of golf: "But your game of golf! Oh, yes! I know him. You put on the tunic red—what is the Inglesh rosib underneath done. You strap your sack of bended-head sticks on the back of a boy twice so small as he beg. He scrape a mud pudding to make balance a leetle white ball. He make three bad tries to balance him, then very angry you call load 'Fore.' Then you what you call address the ball, and, ma foi, your address resembles a line of battle usage to make afraid. You strike, and the ball find himself in the bonkaire. You pull out for the ball, strike at stick, and beat the dust till your partner say, 'Ho, monsieur! You say——' But, my friend, I excuse myself to repeat what you say. Ah! my friend, you are a Canadian, but your golf game gives me what you Inglesh call se bump."

New English Gas Mantle.

Consul T. M. Mahin of Nottingham describes an improved British gas mantle, said to be as remarkable as the newly invented German mantle, which uses a form of copper cellulose impregnated with cerium salts. The new English mantle is dipped in a solution of thorium and cerium, in which is added an ingredient called "laditte," which so adds to its strength and life that it is now unsurpassed after burning 2,500 hours.—U. Poor Reading.

"The Chumpleys had a mind reader at their house the other evening."

"My, what a stupid time he must have had!"

Goldwin Smith to the Press.

After referring to his long career as a publicist, Dr. Goldwin Smith, in a letter read at a recent Canadian Press Association banquet said:—"On the growth of the press during the past 60 years, in literary ability, command of information, variety of subject, and general influence, it is needless to descant. There is one point on which there may be a doubt. It is the vital point of independence. Interests of various kinds, too often sinister, have learned the use that may be made of a clandestine control of the press, and they have not failed to take advantage of the discovery. What is behind the press is in fact one of the most critical questions of the day. To resist such influences is hard. So is it to resist the violent appeals of popular passion, and to risk circulation for the moment in the hope, unhappily not always fulfilled, of an increase of public confidence and a revival of the list of subscribers when the storm has passed.

"On the side of hopefulness I think I may say that during my sojourn in Canada there has been a notable improvement in the literary quality, the independence, and I hope I may add the influence of our local press. A local journal to succeed must be impartial. But there is a measure in partisanship, a measure in the expression of it. And much may be done by a really good local paper to keep up the tone, social and political, of its readers, as well as in supplying them with local news." Dr. Smith concluded with the hope that the members of the press present would always feel assured of his sympathy and desire to help them by any means in his power.

Britain's Street Cars.

The remarkable growth of tramway traffic in the United Kingdom is indicated in a return issued by the Board of Trade. The following figures show the extent of the progress made since 1876:

Miles of route, 1876, 260; 1890, 2,021; 1906, 4,000.
Passengers, 1876, 146,000,000; 1890, 2,236,000,000; 1906, complete, 1876, £230,864; 1906, £3,907,415. Capital expenditure, 1876, £4,267,250; 1906, £26,177,832.

The popularity of electric traction, both overhead and underground, may be gauged from the fact that of the total mileage open, more than only 246 are not worked by electricity.

Local authorities owning and working their own tramways have made a net profit of £2,220,752 on last year's traffic, out of which they applied £663,366 towards the reduction of tramway debt and £305,981 in relief of rates, while carrying £1,251,405 to reserve and renewal funds.

In regard to the London County Council tramways the total length of line open to March 31 last year was fifty miles on the surface and thirty and fifty-three miles on the southern system. The number of passengers carried was 1,000,000,000. The average distance of no fewer than 15,707,200 miles for the year ended March 31st.

The number of miles run by all the tramways in the kingdom was 246,484,

But the congregation have come to the conclusion that they would like to hear the whole choir once more for a change. What they wish to see is both choirs behind the pulpit, as well as three on both sides filled. We have the talent, and good talent too, but why can we not have a choir? What are the reasons? Who is to blame?

ZAM-BUK SAVES A FARMER'S ARM

Some Sensational Proofs of Its Healing Power.

Every day brings interesting instances to light of the wonderful healing power of Zam-Buk herbal balm. Mr. Wm. Snell, a Langenburg, (Sask.) farmer, says:—"I have used Zam-Buk for a bad arm. I got my arm badly cut in the binder, and after the injury had healed the scar broke out with an angry sore. It was all swollen up and dreadfully painful, and would have become off. In a few days Zam-Buk killed the poison, reduced the swelling, and finally healed the arm completely."

ECZEMA CURED. Mr. J. E. Cwack, of 249 Wilson St., Hamilton, says:—"My mother used to have eczema on the back of my hands. Last winter I was especially bad—so bad that I had to be off work for three weeks. While suffering severely I was advised to try Zam-Buk, and did so. I could not have believed anything could have heated so quickly! It just seemed to drive the fiery heat away. In a week I was a wonderfully short time my hands were healed."

PILES CURED. Mr. Neil Devon, of Cut Knife, (Sask.), says:—"For eight years I tried all kinds of things for piles, but got nothing to do me any good until I struck Zam-Buk! That cured me, and I am grateful."

Zam-Buk heals all skin diseases, cuts, burns, scalds, eczema, bad sores, ulcers, chapped places, ripping pommels, chafings, scratches, poisoned wounds, swollen glands, boils. As an embrocation for rheumatism, sciatica, pains, etc., all druggists and stores sell Zam-Buk at 50c. box, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. Send 1c. stamp for dainty trial box.

WISE AND OTHERWISE.

"You are certainly looking better. Did you follow my advice and seek a change?"

"Yes, doctor. And it did me a world of good."

"What did you do?"

"I got another physician."

They Are Carefully Prepared.—Pills which disagree immediately on the stomach cannot be expected to have much effect on the system, and so to overcome costiveness the medicine administered must influence the action of these canals. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are so carefully prepared under the supervision of experts, that the substance in them is so acted upon that the intestines is rendered in action solely by the food through the stomach to the bowels.

"I see a man's salary gets higher his wife's gowns get lower.

"It seems to me, Sam, that you are always looking for work?"

"Yes, sah! so I is, sah! Why, my ole wooden leg is the greatest worker you ever see, sah!"

A Small Pill, but Powerful.—They that judge of the powers of a pill by its size, would consider Parmelee's Vegetable Pills to be lacking. But for a little wonders among pills. What it lacks in size it makes up in potency. The remedies which it carries are put up in these small doses, because they are so powerful that only small doses are required. The medicinal virtues of the extracts is secured in this form and do their work most thoroughly.

"Your name," he stammered, "is—is written on my heart."

"But you're the whitewash," she wouldn't it be more nice over your name were engraved on my stationery?"

Sunday—Wife, what makes the baby scream so furious?

Wife—I think the little dear is suffering from a brain storm, dear.

"A Grand Medicine" is the encomium often passed on Dickie's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and when the results from its use are considered, a norm out by many persons who have employed it in stopping coughs and curing colds, it is more than grand.—Kingston Whig. In the house it is always at hand and it has no equal as a ready remedy. If you have not tried it, do so at once.

Sis—So they got married and went off on their new motor car.

Bess—I wonder where did they spend their honeymoon?

Bella—In the hospital.

A Requisite for the Rancher.—On the cattle ranges of the West, where most all stock are far from doctors and drug stores, Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil is kept on hand by the intelligent ranchers as a ready remedy, not only for many human ills, but as a speedy and safe medicine of surpassing merit. A horse and cattle rancher will find matters greatly simplified by using this Oil.

The Bride, three days after marriage to Arsey: "You marry me gave up your bachelor freedom, dear?"

The Groom—"I should say not. Why, if you were to die to-night I'd get married again to-morrow!"

Use the safe, pleasant and effectual worm killer, Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator, and your child is healthy. Try it.

"Yes, ma'am," the reader was saying, "I'm fond of poetry. Do you really believe in it?"

"Believe in it?" exclaimed the prison visitor.

"Yes, ma'am, I just tried to imitate his signature on a check."

Hopeless Dyspepsia Holloway's Corn Cure? It has no equal for removing these troublesome excrescences as many have testified who have tried it.

Fred—I hear you have taken up the study of palmistry. Do you really believe in it?

Ted—Can't on your life! But it gives a mighty good excuse for holding Mabel's hand.

"Deduction is the thing," declared the law student. "For instance, yonder is a pair of ashes in our yard. That is evidence that we have had fires this winter."

"And, by the way, John," broke in his father, "you might go out and sift that evidence."

Mother—Tommy, what did I say I'd do to you if you touched that jam again?

Tommy—Why, it's funny, ma, that you should forget it, too. I've learned it I can remember.

There was a small Scotch boy who had the quality of astuteness highly developed. The boy's grandmother says the Liverpool Post, was packing his luncheon for him to take to school. Suddenly looking up into the old lady's face he asked:

"Grandmother, do yer specs magnify?"

"A little, my child," was answered. "I can read my Bible the better, but I would just like it if you were taking my sconce."

Shoptaw—Oh, Professor, haven't you brought your wife?

Professor—There! I knew I'd forgotten something!

"May I ask your father for your hand to-night, Miss Ketchum?"

"Can't you wait until to-morrow night, George? I'm afraid Charlie Chumley is going to ask him to-night."

A teacher showed his small pupils a picture, saying, "Now, what is this?" "A horse in a bathing suit," was the prompt reply.

MRS. JANE ANN CLANCY.

Wife of the Rev. Jacob Clancy, died at her home in Adams, Michigan, on Friday night, Feby. 22nd, 1907, after a brief illness, aged 77 years, 4 months and 22 days.

She was born October 30th, 1829, near the village of Bellrig, Oxford County, Ontario, Canada. Her maiden name was Jane Ann Bowerman. She was married to Jacob Clancy, Three years later they moved to their present location, eight children and eleven grand children blessed their union.

For many years Mrs. Clancy with her husband and family, were active members of Newtough, Ont. She joined the church at Wilmot at the age of 18, and was a faithful member of that church until 1887, when the family moved to Michigan. For two years they have been with us in Jackson Mich., from which place she moved with her daughter, Mrs. Jessie Moreland until her death. Here was a beautiful home, a life "hid with Christ in God." Her spiritual life flowed calm and deep, her growth in grace was calm and deep, her growth in grace was steady and sure. Her one desire in life was to glorify God and to be a blessing to others. Prayer was especially the means employed by that purpose. Never will the writer forget the hours of earnest carry donation from the line of personal experience for her Saviour. When too feeble to leave her home, her Bible was her daily companion, and many precious hours did she spend in sweet communion with her Saviour, with whom she seemed to walk hand in hand. All with whom she came in contact felt the blessed influence of her life. The three children rise up and call her blessed.

For years she has been mentally and feeble, her strength constantly on the wane, but in the midst of every failing of mind and body was omnipotent. Following an attack of bronchitis, she fell into a deep sleep on Saturday morning from which she never awoke. Peacefully, quietly, without a struggle she passed into the "Land where dwells the soul forever free." The earthly tabernacle was laid to rest beside the husband and children who had preceded her.

The funeral service was held at the home, conducted by her pastor, Rev. Dr. Dye, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Martin, Presbyting Elder. Accompanying the remains were sixty grandchildren and great grandchildren. The casket bearers were all grandsons. The floral offerings, the casket being literally buried in flowers, were very beautiful. Before leaving the grave, her devoted pastor paid a beautiful tribute to the touching good night to mother by singing the hymn:

"Good night, beloved. Sleep and take thy rest.
Lay down thy head upon the Saviour's breast.
We love thee well, but Jesus loves thee best.
Good night! Good night! Good night."

Mrs. Clancy leaves a household of ten children, as follows, Rev. Hockwell Clancy, of Ionia, Mich.; Mrs. Mary Judson Clancy, pastor of a church in Adams, Mich.; Mrs. Jessie Moreland Clancy, pastor of a large church in Jackson, Mich.; Mrs. Ida Hinsdale, missionary in India; Mrs. Dr. C. P. Friend, of Chicago; Miss Hilda Clancy, of Chicago; Dr. Marshall Clancy, of Chicago; Mrs. Lora Foote, of Battle Creek, Mich.; Professor Bennett Clancy of Ann Arbor, Mich.; Mrs. Florence Clancy, of Leslie, Mich. Her oldest daughter, Mrs. Helen Vrooman, of Kingston, Ont., preceded her mother, to the heavenly home. Her husband and her oldest son, Andrew Nelson, died in infancy. Her strong faith in life nature has been an inspiration to all who knew her, and the influence will live in the lives of many. Her elder friend after her death contained these words, which so characterized her life, that they sample life made glad with the joys of living. I love, I serve, I live in this way, trying to lead the hour that God has given me to glorify Jesus, and on to fields of greater labor to life, where God will wait and then to heaven over all."—Christian Guardian, Toronto, Ont., please copy. Also Kingston Whig.

LENNOX & ADDINGTON BENEFITS

Warden Gallagher reports that by the late amendment to the school law the County of Lennox & Addington will be benefitted to the amount of $4,145, besides nine-half the rest of requirements, which will approximately amount to $1,500, total to the County's credit of $5,500. In consideration of this amount we feel as though the hardships of the county salary to teachers has now fully well healed, and while many school sections have been benefitted, very few have suffered any loss. These figures are based on the fact that every school will receive $15.00 and forty per cent. over amount paid of minimum salary, it being $300.00, and one-half the rest of the school equipment. In addition to this the County will receive $1,207.68 from the Railroad tax, which we never received before. Thanks to the Government for this step in the interests of the farming people and private citizens in general.

AMEY—PAUL.

A very pretty and quiet wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Damon Amey, Ottawa, when their youngest daughter, Ada Pearl, was united in marriage to Mr. Rose H. Paul, of Bath. The ceremony was performed at 12 o'clock noon, on Wednesday, 6th March, by the Rev. J. A. McCallum, Ottawa, in the presence of immediate relatives. As the wedding march was being played by Miss Mamie McCannel, the bride gaily entered the drawing room. The bride was becomingly attired in a suit of cream voile, and was attended by Miss Gertrude Paul, as bridesmaid. The groom was attended by his brother, Mr. H. H. Hooper, of Camden. After the ceremony was performed and congratulations extended, the guests repaired to the dining room, where a sumptuous wedding luncheon was spread. The presents received by the bride were handsome and costly, showing the high esteem in which she was held. Mr. and Mrs. Paul will reside near Bath.

SUN SET AT NOON.

The expression "sun set at noon," applies very pathetically to the demise of one of our esteemed friends, Miss Eliza Hawley, who departed this life at the old home at Gosport, in the Township of Adolphustown, on Tuesday evening, March 12th, 1907. He was the only son of the late Samuel Hawley, and his esteemed wife, whose maiden name was Miss Jemima Hayden. His birth took place on the 31st day of August, in the year 1835. He was always proud to claim Hrattetown as his native township. His age, at the time of his death, was a few months less than 52 years. However that with him the sun of life went down while it was still high noon.

He was married to Miss Harriet Baker, of Portsmouth, near Kingston, in the year 1880. Those who survive him and now mourn his loss are, his devoted wife, his mourning and aged mother, one widowed sister, Mrs. Ransom, and two children, Frank, of Winnipeg, and Miss Jos. Robertson, now residing at the old home at Gosport, with her devoted husband and widowed mother. The deceased contracted a severe cold some ten weeks previous to his death, which developed into pneumonia and terminated fatally, in spite of all that medical science and skilful nursing could do. He entertained a bright hope of eternity from the beginning, and at once surrendered to the will of God. He spent his weeks of lingering illness in seeking and trusting Christ as his only Savior and faithful Shepherd, of patiently and many praying friends. Our translated friend felt satisfied that he had made his peace with God, therefore he was eager and desirous to leave a dying message for his neighbors and friends. The burden of his message coming from his dying lips, "Make your peace with God and Christ do not waste your lives in sin, and run the risk of losing your souls forever." May we all be disposed to heed our neighbor's dying message, since it has been written by God, "He that taketh warning shall deliver his soul." The funeral, which took place on March 14th, was largely attended, and the memorials service, conducted by his pastor, Rev. Herbert Down, was very suitable and deeply impressive. What is mortal of our dear one will wait the trumpet's call, in the Hawley cemetery at Napanee. May his ashes rest in peace until the morning breaks.—Com.

THE LEGEND OF HOCHELAGA.

poetry

We clip the following from the Montreal Standard Memorial Number, in honor of Miss Sarah Maxwell, the young lady teacher who lost her life while saving her little pupils. Our readers will have to guess who "Cyril St. Clair" is.

A LEGEND OF HOCHELAGA.

(Contributed to The Montreal Standard Memorial Number.)

Would you hear a thrilling story?
Would you tell your children's children?
How in quaint old Hochelaga
Deed was done by pale-faced maiden,
With the best smoke-dauntless, stilling,
With the red flames shooting, burning,

Where they teach the little children
Curious things in lore of white men,
Stories of the nation's heroes,
Wondrous tales of far-off countries,
Teach them to be brave and patient,
How to bear each day's temptation.

There, upon that fateful Tuesday,
All unconscious of the danger
Soon to fill these hearts with terror,
Children gathered, young ones, old ones,
With their teachers, gentle Maxwell,
And their leader, Sarah Maxwell.

See, the smoke is curling, writhing,
Coming from, one knows not whither,
Filling stairways, blocking exits.
Tenders calm the little children,
Line them up with words of courage,
Though their hearts are swiftly beating.

Lower rooms are safely emptied;
But upstairs the tiny children,
Frightened, fondly cling to teacher;
While the red fire cuts off succor,
While the hot smoke daunts the bravest,
And grim death is stalking nearer.

"Oh, my children," cries Miss Maxwell.
Heedless of the stars she dashes
To the rescue of the infants.
One by one through broken window
Heeds them into strong men's keeping,
Nearer still grim death is stalking.

"Come," men shout, "the flames are pressing"—
"Nay," she says, "my work's not ended."
Thus the brave heart pale-face maiden,
Back she turns to look for others;
Red flame, hot smoke beat her over,
And triumphant death hath claimed her.

"Greater love than this hath no man,"
So, of old, the Master spoke it.
Is a crown reserved for heroes?
One of them is Sarah Maxwell,
Who, in quaint old Hochelaga,
Gave her life for little children.

We have devoted a great deal of energy to making it so, and we unhesitatingly INVITE everybody to witness the result of our efforts. Silks & Dress Goods Section.

Lansdowne silk and wool in the newest shades of red, green, grey, tan, blue and black, 50 in. wide, $1.75 yard.

Waisting Silks in large range of swagger patterns, 75c to $1.50 yard.

WASH GOODS SECTION.

We have another fine collection of materials that plainly express the competitive efforts of the best designers and printers of the world. This time New York plays the important part to secure admiration and commendation for their varied products. There are the beautiful soft Medallion cloths exquisitely printed, outlined Batiste, which has no equal for its gorgeous makeup. These are exclusive patterns confined to us, giving particular dressers something different. Textile printing is at its zenith in United States, and there are some of the newest fabrics, 25c, 35c and 50c yd.

The public are now realizing that the advance in prices of all goods is a FACT and not a DELUSION. With raw materials advanced 25 per cent. to 75 per cent., it is folly to pretend to give old values. The width or the quality, or both, must be reduced to "meet a price", consequently the article is made poor, and therefore is not cheap. A cheap article is one that has intrinsic value in appearance, wear and color. But times are better, therefore good materials are best to buy.

Small Wear Department.

Easter Mousquetaire Gloves in all shades, $1.00 and $1.25.
16 Button, $2.00 and $2.50. 18 button, $3.00 pair.
Easter Throw Ties of chiffon, silk and net, good colors, nice patterns, all shades, $1.00 to $2.75.
Easter Wash Collars, pretty shapes and dainty colors, 25c to 50c.
Easter Ribbon in dresden, elegant shades for collars, girdles and belts, 35c to 75c yd.
Easter Belts in newest shades and shapes of silk and leather, 50c to $1.50.

Ready-to-wear Section.

Coats, (short) pony eaton, box, semi-fitting and tight fitting, in every new shade and design, at most trimmings. $7.00 to $10.00.

Coats (long) semi-fitted, loose box, bias back and Prince Chap in best materials and colors, $6.00 to $20.00.

Suits—Fancy jacket with silk piping, mercerized lined, made with short sleeves, imitation vest front, trimmed with fancy braid. Nine gore skirt with two box pleats down front, overlapping seam stitched down about half way, from which point they flare. $15.00.

Remnants of Linoleums.

These are perfect only short lengths. Inspection will convince you of their perfectness.

4½ yard end	40c for 29c.	3½ yard end	50c for 36c.	7½ yard end	50c for 36c.
9½ "	40c for 29c.	4 "	40c for 29c.	6 1-2 "	60c for 39c.
11 "	60c for 39c.

These prices are for square yard, and each piece is 16-4 Linoleum.

The name MADILL is SYNONYMOUS with QUALITY. It implies a superior standard of merchandise that is in a distinctive sphere of its own, and we are constantly endeavoring to raise that standard. The Departments are striving to reach an even higher quality plane and retain the moderateness that distinguished the MADILL store from all others.

Come with the Crowds to Madill's Saturday Evening.

HAIR TELLS CHARACTER.

Color of Hair Said to Indicate a Person's Temperament.

Many people believe that blonde, or light hair denotes affection and dark hair constancy. A person without hair is not devoid of character; far from it. The disposition of the average baldheaded man is to show such solicitude for the welfare of others, that he neglects himself. A germ causes baldness, Prof. Raboursud, of Paris, France, announced at a recent convention of dandruff germs, causing it to become totally bald in five weeks' time. To rid the scalp of these dangerous germs it is necessary to apply Newbro's Herpicide.

MILLINERY OPENINGS.

THE ROBINSON CO.

The Robinson Co.'s electrical and dry goods display on Saturday, gave the public a realistic demonstration of a great dry goods house. Such vast assortments of high class goods in a town the size of Napanee, is an eye opener to strangers. Napanee people are proud of their "Greatest Store of Stone." The result is, that The Robinson Co. have increased their volume of business, until to-day, they are one of the largest wholesale dry goods and millinery houses in the country. Making the largest business. For the benefit of our own people and many at homes, we will tell you about some of the Dress Goods display was the finest in many staple lines. Suitings are very pretty, Such as you have rarely possessed. Dress Fabrics are shown in almost countless varieties. And the new Cashmere stuffs. Artistic drapes brought into play and exquisite pictures of color combination, for instance, Alice Blue Brocade Dresden. Such leading shades as Copenhagen Blue, Hyacinth, Grape, Black and white, Pearl Grey, were shown with correct accessories to match. Yards of embroidered Linen, Duchess Lace, Heavenly Braid and Applique up to $10.00 a piece, only go to show how well people dress. We were pleased to "Linen Display" and it certainly was fine. Hand embroidered Linen doily and linens no attractive to every lover of home good housekeeping. Real Irish Linens were shown with every requirement. Table mats, centre pieces and sheer white fabrics, washable for the summer girl.

The ground floor did not have all the good things, for there were many other departments. Carpet department had an elaborate exhibit. Wall Papers, Curtain Materials, Spring Jackets, Skirts and Shirt Waists. Dressers, Bureaus and Dainty Coats were all represented in this display. We were glad to interpret to you about the Carpet and Linoleum furnishing exhibit. A showing that would open your eyes. Such quantities, such qualities, such styles, such colorings. Carpets, tier after tier, of fabrics were stacked to form individual sectional pattern for one end to the other of this big Carpet department. Rolls of rugs and mats made marvellous contrast. A furnishing display, worth the while. One would wonder where all the carpets would go, but the management informed us that the increasing prosperity of our country always lived in a stronger tendency to fix up and improve homes. Wall Paper Mummy drew room with a drum. When we visited it the complete display was ready. Novelty bands were festooned from the ceiling. Floral decorations and picture rails prolific.

Lavyland scene. The artistic interior display was the work of Miss Bell Hodge. The electrical display was in charge of Messrs. Mumby and Mackay. The rare and exquisite beauty of the interior was simply dazzling. Truly, it was a revelation.

The Robinson Co.'s display of millinery was to be thoroughly described of this fact. There possibly never was a more beautiful display. Flowers, feathers and trimmings were cleverly combined. The color harmonies the colors are Copenhagen Blue, Lilac, Pearl Grey, Cardinal, Tan, Navy, Alice Blue, Brown, Copper shades, Pearl and Move Grich. The hats are of the mushroom order and are shown in the Dutch, chip, leghorn and Panama braids. The popular flowers are the asters, poppies, dahlias, hydrangeas, roses, lilacs, and roses in all sizes and colors. Long plumes and tall ostriches were a chief feature this season. The long ostrich effects are twined with grasses being much admired on many of the handsome models. Ostrich feathers, shaded and plain are extensively used and add to the gracefulness of the hats.

MADILL BROS.

Although the clouded sky threatened rain all day Saturday, it did not prevent crowds of Napanonans from enjoying the magnificent window displays or the beautiful interior decorations of the Madill establishment. Many were the expressions of surprise and delight at the unique novelties.

On entering the store at the east entrance, one is attracted by the superb exhibition of attractive spring Dress Goods—most complete display of fashionable fabrics ever shown in this county of room in the large dress goods department. Mr. Madill has spared no pains and expense in the selection of the immense assortment, and his fall exhibition of dress goods and wellings for Easter and spring wear, is the largest and most up-to-date we ever saw at a glance. Purchasers can select about the centre of the store the pretty wash fabrics were displayed in the most tasteful manner, giving the anxious crowds a splendid opportunity of passing through to the extreme end of the east store, where the pretty ready-to-wear and millinery section was in full bloom. Some of the prettiest and most carefully designed garments in white-wear ever seen in Napanee were shown, including bridal outfits, and separate and extensive assortment.

Entering the Carpet department, one is greeted with a perfect wealth of colors and draperies of the finest and most fashionable patterns for rugs and carpets. Never even displayed in the Napanee market before, and we venture to say that in no other store in Eastern Ontario will such a magnificent display of carpets, rugs, draperies and curtains be found.

Excellent music was furnished, and the surroundings were pleasant, an opening that will be remembered by everybody.

THE ART OF WALKING.

The delightful art of walking, the easy gracefulness of Dorothy Sothern and Whitman praised so highly by the leading actors and actresses, the simplest of exercises, is in danger of falling into disrepute. Mary T. Saxon Carman in The Delineator for April.

Fashionable women have become ridiculous manner of walking and carriage. Only a few years ago, a woman must do one thinks it worth while to go to walk unnecessarily, there can be no uniform fashion of good walking. The normal walk is not a matter of caprice, but of art; it fends itself to the infinite varieties of character, and becomes in each instance expressive of the individuality of the one who recognizes a man by his gait as easily as by his voice.

The first requisite of good walking is a good posture. If the body is well poised at each point of its motion, the weight will rest equally on the feet. The rest of walking which has been described as a series of falls, is due to the fact that the body is not well poised, and there is no saying where the feet will fall in the recovery from the momentary loss of balance. A continuous state of unstable equilibrium is the best description of the motion of walking, and other, yet are fewer out of good walker spins the earth deftly beneath his feet, while a poor one is forever trying on his back, spins a barrel or a stationary wheel.

Constipation

Baked sweet apples, with some people, bring prompt relief for Constipation. With others coarse all-wheat bread will have the same effect. Nature undoubtedly has a vegetable remedy to relieve every ailment known to man, if physicians can but find Nature's way to health. And this is strikingly true with regard to Constipation.

The bark of a certain tree in California—Cascara Sagrada—offers a most excellent aid to this end. But, combined with Egyptian Senna, Blue-jury Elm Bark, Solid Extract of Prunes, etc., this same Cascara Bark is given its greatest possible power to correct constipation. A toothsome Candy Tablet, called Lax-ets, is now made at the Dr. Shoop Laboratories, from this ingenious and most effective prescription. Its effect on Constipation, Biliousness, Sour Stomach, Bad Breath, Sallow Complexion, etc., is indeed prompt and satisfying.

No griping, no unpleasant after effects are experienced, and Lax-ets are put up in beautiful lithographed metal boxes at 5 cents and 25 cents per box.

THE HOUND OF THE BASKERVILLES

BY A. CONAN DOYLE.

Author of "The Green Flag" and "The Great Boer War."

"No, sir, but the food was gone when next I went that way."

"Then he was certainly there?"

"So you would think, sir, unless it was the other man who took it."

I sat with my coffee-cup half way to my lips and stared at Barrymore.

"You mean that there was another man then?"

"Yes, sir; there is another man upon the moor."

"Have you seen him?"

"No, sir."

"How do you know of him then?"

"Selden told me of him, sir, a week ago or more. He's in hiding, too, but he's not a convict as far as I can make out. I don't like it, Mr. Watson—I tell you straight, sir, that I don't like it." He spoke with a sudden passion of earnestness.

"Now, listen to me, Barrymore! I have no interest in this matter but that of your master. I have come here with no object except to help him. Tell me, frankly, what it is that you don't like."

Barrymore hesitated for a moment, as if he rerretted his outburst, or found it difficult to express his own feelings in words.

"It's all these goings-on, sir," he cried at last, waving his hand towards the rain-lashed window which faced the moor. "There's bad luck over some where, and there's black villainy brewing, to that I'll swear! Very glad I should be, sir, to see Sir Henry on his way back to London again!"

"But what is it that alarms you?"

"Look at Sir Charles's death! That was bad enough, for all that the doctors said, and the inquest found. But add the moor at night. There's not a man would cross it after sundown if he was paid for it. Look at this stranger hiding out yonder, and watching and waiting! What's waiting for? What does it mean? It means no good to anyone of the name of Baskerville, and very glad I shall be to see the back of all on the day that Sir Henry's new servants are ready to take over the Hall."

"But about this stranger," said I. "Can you tell me anything about him? What did Selden say? Did he find out where he hid, or what he was doing?"

"He saw him once or twice, but he is a deep one, and gives nothing away. At first he thought that it was one of the police, but soon he found that he had some lay of his own. A kind of gentleman he was, as far as he could see, but what he was doing he could not make out."

"And where did he say that he lived?"

"Among the old houses on the hillside—the stone huts where the old folk used to live."

"But how about his food?"

"Selden found out that he has got a lad who works for him and brings him all he needs. I daresay he goes to Coombe Tracey for what he wants."

"Very good, Barrymore. We may talk further of this some other time. When the butler had gone I walked over to the black window, and I looked through a blurred pane at the driving clouds and at the tossing outline of the wind-swept trees. It is a wild night indoors, and what must it be in a stone hut upon the moor. What a creature of hatred can be which sends a man to lurk in such a place at such a time! And what deep and evil purpose can be his which he hides by such a trial! There, in that hut upon the moor, seems to be the very centre of that problem which has vexed me so sorely. I swear that another day shall not pass before I have set to work to have done all that man can do to reach the heart of the mystery.

CHAPTER XI.

The extract from my private diary which forms the last chapter has brought my narrative up to the 18th of October, a time when these strange events began to move swiftly towards their terrible conclusion. The incidents of the next few days are indelibly graven upon my recollection, and I can tell them without reference to the notes which I took at the time. I start then from the day which succeeded that upon which I had established two facts of great importance, the one that Mrs. Laura Lyons of Coombe Tracey had written to Sir Charles Baskerville and made an appointment with him at the very place and hour that he met his death, the other that the lurking man upon the moor was to be found among the stone huts upon the hill-side. With these two facts in my possession I felt that either my intelligence or my courage must be deficient if I could not throw some further light upon these dark places.

I had no opportunity to tell the baronet what I had learned about Mrs. Lyons upon the evening before, for Dr. Mortimer remained with us at cards until it was very late. At breakfast, however, I informed him about my discovery, and asked him whether he would care to accompany me to Coombe Tracey. At first he was very eager to come, but on second thoughts it seemed to both of us that if I went alone the results might be better. The moment that Lyons found that the less information we might obtain. I therefore, without saying anything to Dr. Mortimer or my colleague, set off alone upon my new quest.

When I reached Coombe Tracey I told Perkins to put up the horses, and I made inquiries for the lady whom I had come to interrogate. I had no difficulty in finding her rooms, which were central and very fashionable. A maid showed me in without ceremony, and I entered the sitting-room of a lady, who was sitting before a Remington typewriter, sprung up with a pleasant smile of welcome. Her face fell, however, when she saw that I was a stranger, and she sat down again and asked me the object of my visit.

The first impression left by Mrs. Lyons was one of extreme beauty. Her eyes and hair were of the same rich hazel color, and her cheeks, though considerably freckled, were flushed with the exquisite bloom of the brunette, the dainty pink which lurks at the heart of the sulphur rose. Admiration was, I repeat, the first impression. But the second was criticism. There was something subtly wrong with the face, some coarseness of expression, some hardness, perhaps, of eye, some looseness of lip which marred its perfect beauty. But these, of course, are after-thoughts. At the moment I was simply conscious that I was in the presence of a very handsome woman, and that she was asking me the reasons for my visit. I had not quite understood until that instant how delicate my mission was.

"I have the pleasure," said I, "of knowing your father."

It was a clumsy introduction, and the lady made me feel it.

"There is nothing in common between my father and me," she said. "I owe him nothing, and his friends are not mine. If it were not for the late Sir Charles Baskerville and his generosity I might have starved for all that my father cared."

"It was about the late Sir Charles Baskerville that I have come here to see you."

The freckles started out on the lady's face.

"What can I tell you about him?" she asked, and her fingers played nervously over the stops of her typewriter.

"You knew him, did you not?"

"I have already said that I owe a great deal to his kindness. If I am able to support myself it is largely due to the interest which he took in my unhappy circumstances."

"Did you correspond with him?"

"The lady looked quickly up with an angry gleam in her hazel eyes.

"What is the object of these questions?" she asked, sharply.

"The object is to avoid a public scandal. It is better that I should say them here than that the matter should pass outside our control."

She was silent and her face was still very pale. At last she looked up with something reckless and defiant in her manner.

"Well I'll answer," she said. "What are your questions?"

"Did you correspond with Sir Charles?"

"I certainly wrote to him once or twice to acknowledge his delicacy and his generosity."

"What is the object of these questions?" she asked, sharply.

"The object is to avoid a public scandal. It is better that I should say them here than that the matter should pass outside our control."

She was silent and her face was still very pale. At last she looked up with something reckless and defiant in her manner.

"Well I'll answer," she said. "What are your questions?"

"Did you correspond with Sir Charles?"

"I certainly wrote to him once or twice to acknowledge his delicacy and his generosity."

"Have you the dates of those letters?"

"No."

"Have you ever met him?"

"Yes, once or twice, when he came into Coombe Tracey. He was a very retiring man, and he preferred to do good by stealth."

"But if you saw him so seldom and wrote so seldom, how did he know enough about your affairs to be able to help you, as you say that he has done?"

She met my difficulty with the utmost readiness.

"There were several gentlemen who knew my sad history and united to help me. One was Mr. Stapleton, a neighbor and intimate friend of Sir Charles's. He was exceedingly kind, and it was through him that Sir Charles learned about my affairs."

I knew that Sir Charles Baskerville had made Stapleton his almoner upon several occasions, so the lady's statement bore the impress of truth upon it.

"Did you ever write to Sir Charles asking him to meet you?" I continued.

Mrs. Lyons flushed with anger again.

"Really, sir, this is a very extraordinary question."

"I am sorry, Madame, but I must repeat it."

"Then I answer, certainly not."

"Not even the very day of Sir Charles's death?"

The flush had faded in an instant, and a deadly face was before me. Her dry lips could not speak the "No" which I saw rather than heard.

"Surely your memory fails you," said I. "I could even quote a passage of your letter. It ran 'Please, please, as you are a gentleman, burn this letter, and be at the gate by ten o'clock.'"

I thought that she had fainted, but she recovered herself by a supreme effort.

"Is there no such thing as a gentleman?" she gasped.

"You do Sir Charles an injustice. He did burn the letter. But sometimes a letter may be legible even when burned. You acknowledge now that you wrote it."

"Yes, I did write it," she cried, pouring out her soul in a torrent of words. "I did write it. Why should I deny it? I have no reason to be ashamed of it. I wished him to help me. I believed that if I had an interview I could gain his help, so I asked him to meet me."

"But why at such an hour?"

"Because I had only just learned that he was going to London next day and might be away for months. There were reasons why I could not get there earlier."

"But why a rendezvous in the garden instead of a visit to the house?"

"Do you think a woman could go alone at that hour to a bachelor's house?"

"Well, what happened when you did get there?"

"I never went."

"What was that?"

"That is a private matter. I cannot tell it."

"You acknowledge then that you made an appointment with Sir Charles at the very hour and place at which he met his death, but you deny that you kept the appointment."

"That is the truth."

Again and again I cross-questioned her, but I could extract no further point.

"Mrs. Lyons," said I, as I rose from this long and inconclusive interview, "you are taking a very great responsibility and putting yourself in a very false position by not making an absolutely candid statement of all that you know. If I have to call in the aid of the police you will find how seriously matters are compromised. If your conduct is innocent, why did you in the first instance deny having written to Sir Charles upon that date?"

"Because I feared that some false conclusion might be drawn from it, and that I might find myself involved in a scandal."

"And why were you so pressing that Sir Charles should destroy your letter?"

"If you have read the letter you will know."

"I did not say that I had read all the letter."

"You quoted some of it."

"I quoted the postscript. The letter had, as I said, been burned and it was not all legible. I ask you once again why it was that you were so pressing that Sir Charles should destroy this letter which he received on the day of his death."

"The matter is a very private one."

"The more reason why you avoid a public investigation."

"I will tell you, then. If you have heard anything of my unhappy history you will know that I made a rash marriage and had reason to regret it."

"I have heard so much."

IV.," wherein the carrier complains that "the turkeys is the poorest ever quite starved," the phrase occurring in the first sonnet of the second set, whereas turkeys came from America, and that the word was not even discovered for a century after Shakespeare. In the first sonnet of the fifth set of "Sonnets to Sundry Notes of Music," addressed to Priscilla, "How comes Phebe, smiling?" the reference is to Phebe, of which proves the appositeness of the remark that even Homer sometimes nods, as Shakespeare did to Phebe in other instances. Many others could be deduced, but the above examples will suffice. Going a step higher, we find the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland of a former day signing his name in full, because, for in a proclamation issued from the Castle authorities in Dublin we find it set forth that "whereas, the greatest economy is necessary in the consumption of all sorts of grain and especially in the consumption of potatoes," &c. It is also tells of a lawyer who in an action for assault and battery informed the judge that the defendant beat his client with a certain blunt instrument called an iron pestle."—London Standard.

Always at Home.

It was all legally and satisfactorily settled early in the reign of Queen Victoria that the British sovereign may quit Britain without let or hindrance, and constitutionally discharges her or his duties abroad as well as she shall be chosen. Where the King is there is the court, and, therefore, the British dominions. Parliament might be summoned to assemble, Oriental rulers have a more subtle method of legalizing their journeys. The Emperor of Japan worships in the dust of his ancestors every morning. But he need not necessarily go to their tombs; earth from them may be strewn before him, and he obeys the strict letter of the law. The Shah of Persia develops the idea still more amazingly. Nightly he should never take his feet off Persian soil. And he does not. No matter how far he may travel, he keeps his feet on Persian soil; it is packed into the false sole of his boots. Hence, though he eat his dinner at Buckingham Palace or discuss the weather with the Kaiser at Potsdam, the soil of Persia is always beneath his royal feet.

Compulsory Archery.

Archery was once a compulsory exercise in every English parish after Sunday church. "It is a worthy game," preached Roger Ascham, "a wholesome kind of exercise, also often recommended in physic." A fine of a halfpenny per shaft was levied from archery practice on Sunday was enforced in Edward III.'s reign, and Henry VIII.'s crack regiment, the yeomen of the guard, was composed entirely of bowmen. For a hundred years after the introduction of the hand gun archery still had been used in England as early as 1471. This decreased, in James I.'s time, into the callver, so called from the English misconception of an order to supply English soldiers with guns of the same "caliber" as the French pattern, and the longbow was finally abandoned in the civil wars.

Malzypop in England.

Malzypop in London is the product of the latest American invasion. It is asserted, and with truth, that there is a record for such introductions has been broken in this case, for it took just one week from the first appearance of the trademark and to lease a building. At the second week the finished product was being turned out. Malzypop is simply popcorn as we are familiar with it in this clime and it is prepared in oiled paper. The name is a corruption of the word as pronounced where corn is known as maize. The two Americans who have started operations in this country are from the foreign rights for popcorn machinery, and have secured control by export of shelled corn from the United States for ten years.

Wife—Now that Dr. Parker has married that millionaire, do you suppose he'll cut us?

Husband—Cut us? Pshaw! he'll charge more for doing it."

"What for?" asked the surprised assistant.

DUE TO THE USE OF HYOMEI. CURES WITHOUT STOMACH DOSING.

Inquiry at the local drug stores will show that the sale of remedies for catarrh has decreased very much in the last year. Hyomei, the catarrh cure that never disappoints, is the fact, responsible for the decrease in sale of catarrh remedies. Hundreds of people who were formerly bought a gross at a time of other catarrh cures, now call for Hyomei and are rarely called for.

There is also a noticeable falling off in the sale of cough mixtures. Why? Because Hyomei cures the cough as well as the catarrh. It is not necessary to buy a cough mixture when you use Hyomei. Breathe it and the cough will disappear.

Hyomei is a scientific treatment for catarrh, bronchitis, coughs, colds, throat troubles and consumption. It is breathed through a little pocket inhaler, which comes with every outfit. Its healing, germ killing balm reaches every part of the air passages, even the minutest air cells of the lungs, and cures where all other remedies fail.

Hyomei is guaranteed to cure catarrh, coughs, colds, bronchitis, throat troubles and consumption. If you have a Hyomei outfit, use it according to directions, and if it fails to cure, your money will be refunded. If you have no outfit, one will be sold you for $1.00, and additional bottles, if needed, fifty cents.

All druggists should be able to supply you with Hyomei; or we will send it by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Extra bottles, if needed, fifty cents.

Thick and Thin Skin.

The skin of men and women of some nations, particularly in hot countries, is much thicker than that of others. The central African negro has a skin about half as thick again as that of a European. That of a negro is thicker over the head and back, presumably to form a protection from the sun.

The first playbill was issued from Drury Lane theater, London, on April 8, 1663.

Edinburgh.

Possibly no other city in the world has two such opposite nicknames as Edinburgh. By some it is called the Modern Athens, by others Auld Reekie.

LOST AND FOUND.

In England 10 Per Cent Is the Recognized Reward.

"If you lost a watch worth $100 what reward would you give the finder for its return?"

"Ten per cent, eh? Well, that is about right," said the detective. "It is more, though, than the average person would give. Here in America in lost and found cases there is no recognized percentage of reward, but in England there is such a percentage, namely, half a crown in a pound; that is to say, about 10 per cent. Ten per cent is what the finder must be paid in England provided he takes the find to a police station or to Scotland Yard. He always does so, as otherwise the owner is apt to give him less than the legal 10 per cent. I lost in a London cab a hat bag worth £20. The hat bag was returned by the cabby to Scotland Yard and I left there for him gladly a reward of £2. If the bag had been worth £2,000 I'd have given him cheerfully enough, and they will give less are to my mind dishonest."

THE GAME OF CHESS.

Finest Mental Drillmaster the World Has Ever Known.

When did the Romans pioneer over the door of the temple of Janus "Ex Oriente Lux et Lodus Scacchorum" (Out of the East Comes Light and the Game of Chess) they spoke of the two greatest bequests that the storied east had ever made to the progress and enlightenment of the world—the light of religion and the greatest mental achievement of man since he came through Eden's frowning portals.

In the middle ages, when the monks and abbots watched from afar the brutal soldiery of Christendom sweeping down like a pestilence on the sunny plains of the south, they chanted "A Furore Normanorum libera nos, O Domine" (From the fury of the Northmen deliver us, O God) and returned to chess—all that was left a noble soul in a vain and turbulent world.

Chess is the finest mental drillmaster the world has ever known. As a mind trainer it ranks above Greek and dialectics.

But, above all, it is the science of battle; it is war without bloodshed; it is strife on equal terms, in which all the race loves and to which from the cradle to the grave all mortality is subject.

The Prize Dutch Girl.

The effigies of Holland is exceedingly strict in all classes. The young girl is most carefully chaperoned, and she never appears in public even in church, unless accompanied by her parents, some male relative or other equally trustworthy person. Even in church parents sit round the walls sipping their coffee or wine, and the young men must make the best of their chances in the opportunities afforded by the dance, for when it pleases the authorities to depart there is no excuse for it, the girls must go too. An unmarried girl always takes the right hand of her partner, while the matron takes the left, perhaps because it is nearer the heart.

An Example.

One of the most intimate friends of M. Gounod was a retired naval officer who lived in a distant corner of Normandy. As soon as the author of "Faust" died the officer went over all the letters which he had received from Dumas and destroyed every one which referred to any private affairs of the author. Where letters also contained literary and philosophical discussions he carefully blotted out the personal parts in order that nothing of a personal nature might ever reach the public. This is an example not often followed.

Avoiding the Doctor.

Dr. Sanderson, an old Scotch physician, was a queer character, but a shrewd one.

So roughly did he handle his patients that the ignorant were chiefly anxious to employ him. The story goes that as he was passing along the street one day a sweep rolled from the top to the bottom of a staircase outside one of the houses.

"Are you hurt?" called the doctor, running to him.

"Not a bit, doctor—not a bit," replied the man in haste. "Indeed, I feel a' the better."

Menagerie at Home.

Jones declined to visit the zoo with his friend, says London Health. "I don't have to go to the zoo," he said, "because my eldest daughter does the kangeroo walk, my second daughter talks like a parrot, my son laughs like a hyena, my cook is as cross as a bear and my mother-in-law says I'm an old gorilla."

Willing to Try.

Stern Father—You want to marry my daughter, do you? Young Man—I do, Stern Father—What's your salary? Young Man—Oh, I'm not particular. Just give me a trial of three months, and if I fail to satisfactorily as a son-in-law you need not pay me any salary.

Male Vanity.

Man believes himself irresistible at all ages, and I believe that the older he grows the more fascinating he thinks himself.—London World.

Commencing at 8.30 Thursday morning, April 4th. Don't forget the hour as they will not last long. They are full 25 inch ribs, fancy crook polished handles and steel rods. Not heavy in weight—in fact very suitable for boys' and girls' school umbrellas.

MEN'S NEW SPRING SUITS AND TOP COATS.

The most particular dresser can be garbed in finely tailored garments ready-to-wear. WE NEVER HAD SO FINE AN EASTER SHOWING. More men depend on Robinson's each year for their garments—men who know dress and its fine points. The man who wants to keep right up to the minute and the more conservative dresser who wants the latest, but not the extremest in clothes. We satisfy every good taste in dress; and the growing clientele and business attest the success of The Robinson Co. Clothing Store. Our men's clothing department is a branch of a great business with an enormous power for buying. You can understand then why we get prices that few, very few, other stores get. See the point?

YOUTH'S CLOTHING gets the same care as men's. There's more trouble in the making; we have to plan to get results.

Youth's Suits, $5 to $12.50. Men's Spring Overcoats, $6 to $12.50. Men's Raincoats, $5.40 to $13.50. Men's Suits, $3.60 to $16.65. Men's and Youth's Trousers, 90c to $4.00. Men's and Youth's Vests, 90c to $3.50. Men's Top Coats, $6.75 to $12.50. Boys' Suits and Top Coats in full Easter readiness.

Even at 50c each we show you more than twenty different patterns. All are in open compartments in the shelving so that you can quickly see the one you want.

Easter Millinery.

Formal opening days are over, but there is no lack of interest in splendid displays of Millinery. Becomingness is now-a-days the style note. Never lose sight of that. In a word the spring hats are glorious. We shall be glad to have you enjoy the displays. Good all week but best right now.

Dress Goods—Now is Time for Choice.

The season is in its readiness. If you are interested in a particular shade and find it scarce, come to our dress goods department and likely that it is here. One of the strongest features of the showing is the display of the rare out of the ordinary color tones. That very feature that makes the season's best styles.

OUR DRESS GOODS DAPARTMENT SERVICE—We have with us and at your service (if you please) expert salespeople who know their business. They know the materials, shades and trimmings that may be used for becomingness. You would be perfectly safe in leaving selections entirely to them. We have lots of mail order customers who do season after season. We refer particularly to customers in British Columbia and Northwest.

New Corsets for Easter Costume

Your new costume will call for new corsets. Think of our Corset Department when you start to look. Makes that stand the fit, test only have room here. Fit YOU if you please.

The New Carpets and Imported Rugs are Ready.

Accuracy of service, genuiness of the goods offered and vast selection have conspired to give us commanding position in the carpet business.—LEADERSHIP. And each year's growth of business makes that leadership more pronounced. Nothing is quite so wasteful as buying carpets from cheap stores that misname their goods.

YOU ARE INVITED FOR TO-MORROW (SATURDAY) NIGHT RUG DISPLAY.

To-morrow night we will make another special display of Rugs. Making a feature of showing Tapestry Rugs. Ready at 7.30 p.m.

People want a Varnish Stain that will wash and varnish furniture and woodwork without covering up or obscuring the grain of the wood. In these days of pigment varnish stains, which are in reality varnish paints, it is worth while to remember that Chimpbell's Varnish Stains give a beautiful color and enamel effect without obscuring the handsome grain of natural woods. Evans, of this place, and Lyel, of Hoosier, and three sisters, Mrs. C. Allenbrack, Richmond, Mrs. J. N. Switzer, Desmond, and Mrs. W. Mac Williams, Camden East. People want a Varnish Stain that will wash and varnish furniture and woodwork without covering up or obscuring the grain of the wood. In three days of ordinary Varnish stains, which are in reality varnish paints, it is worth while to remember that Carey Bell's Varnish Stains give a beautiful stain and varnish effect without obscuring the handsome grain of natural woods. BAD CROP YEARS.

When Birds and Animals Do Not Mate at the Mating Season.

"When birds and animals do not mate at the mating season, it is a sign that a bad year is coming," said a farmer.

"Quails, gophers, rabbits and squirrels all refuse to mate in certain years. These years afterward turn out to be bad ones. The quails are particularly weather wise. By instinct the little wild creatures know that for lack of rain or for some other reason there is to be a grass famine and a seed famine, and instead of pairing off and mating and setting up housekeeping in little families of two, they remain mustered in the large bands in which they have flown all winter, living, as it were, a kind of apartment house life. That year probably turns out a bad one, though the bachelor and spinster quails, with a good deal of picking and scratching, manage to get enough to eat. But to feed families of little ones in such a famine year would be impossible.

"In California the squirrels in a famine year not only do not mate; they do not even live. They become dormant. As by a miracle, they remain dormant until a season of plenty comes with the next winter's rains."—Exchange.

For Her Welfare.

Mrs. Goodchild had made up her mind that most of the so-called sins of the present day was not, strictly speaking, guilty at all. Whoever gave, she had concluded, did so for the pleasure of the thing, and not for the pleasure of seeing his or her name in print on subscription lists, and she did not agree with this ostentation.

"Here, my good man," she said one day last week to a man who had begged alms of her, "here is a dispensing piece, and please to understand that I do not give this because I hope to be rewarded for my charity some day, but because it gives me pleasure to do so."

The burly beggar looked dubiously at the tiny silver coin.

"Look 'ere, mum," he said. "In this 'ere wicked world we don't often get the chance to enjoy ourselves. Why not make it a shilling an' have a real good time?"—London Tit-Bits.

Important Correction.

Under the terrorism in France people learned to be excessively cautious in all they said and still more cautious in what they wrote.

An old letter is said to be in existence of the revolutionary period, in which the author had at first written to a friend, "I write under the reign of a great emotion."

Then, apparently reflecting that it was dangerous to speak of "reigns" at such an epoch, he amended the sentence thus:

"I write under the republic of a great emotion."

Forethought.

"That fellow Mulkey you were engaged to at one time may have some of your old love letters, may he not?" asked the husband. "And aren't you afraid he might be cad enough to"—

"Not a bit," replied the wife decisively. "He knows I've got a trunkful of his love letters to reciprocate if he ever does."

Helped His Ambition.

"Thank you, judge," said the prisoner sentenced to thirty days on bread and water.

Seeing that the magistrate was puzzled, he explained that he long had desired to try the simple life but lacked the courage to begin.

FROM THE EMPTY TOMB

COME VOICES OF WARNING, JOY AND TRIUMPH.

EASTER MEDITATION FOR ALL

Calvary's Three Crosses—Some Pictures of the Resurrection—Incidents At Funeral of D. L. Moody—The Triumphs of Easter—Sin Shall Not Always Have Power—Christ Has Conquered Sin and Death.

Matter according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1907, by Frederick Dixon, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., March 24.—Appropriate to the Easter season is this sermon, in which from the empty cross and from the empty tomb the preacher hears Christ obliterate of warning, joy and triumph. The text is Mark xv, 27: "And with him they crucify two thieves, the one on his right hand and the other on his left."

In my lifetime I have seen many pictures symbolic of the first Easter morn. Some of them have depicted Jesus in the garden walking among the lilies talking with Mary. Some of them have pictured Christ stepping out of the tomb amid the prostrate forms of the Roman soldiery. Some of them have pictured Peter and John looking into the empty crypt, where was nothing but the shroud of the risen Lord. But of all Easter pictures the one which impressed me the most was that which used to hang upon the walls of my boyhood home. In the foreground of the picture was a broad winged angel flying. He was a divine messenger bringing from earth the glad tidings of the risen Christ. To the right of the picture was the rising sun rimming the eastern hills. And as this sun was crawling over the eastern hills it cast its light upon six pieces of wood which had been formed into three crosses. There stood these three crosses rounded at their human burdens. The horrors of the crucifixion were over. The corpses of the two thieves and of the dead Christ had been quietly laid away in their graves. The decrees of the Roman law had been carried out. No pardon was there. No repentant dying thief was there. No blaspheming murderer was there. Only the three silent crosses were there. They were mute signs that the horrors of the blackest of all Fridays had forever passed away. There stood the three empty crosses bathed in the glory of the rising sun of the first Easter morn.

As a little boy standing before that Easter picture, and sometimes to wonder if God really did favor the light of the rising sun upon those three empty crosses, as he favored the light of the star which guided the three wise men from the east upon the Bethlehem manger in which Jesus was born. Does God's sun truly reflect the joy of the Divine Father's benediction? Mr. Torrey in one of his Melbourne addresses gave a vivid description of the death and funeral of his great leader, D. L. Moody. He said in part: "The good Moody to speak, there lay the body in front of the platform. There sat his wife and children with hands erect, with their eyes looking right into mine with a peaceful, triumphant expression. When we sang those wonderful hymns about Immanuel's land and the second coming of Christ, the magnificent as you call them, joined in the singing with shining faces out of love, when all had spoken and that service was over, Will Moody, the son, rose calmly in his place and turning round to face the audience, gave a triumphant testimony to the power of the risen Christ and the Holy Ghost. And then, as if a shutter above had swung open, the sun broke through the clouds, and every ray of sunlight that came into the church fell on the face lying still in the casket."

I wonder if it was a mere haphazard chance that the light of God's sun fell upon the face of God's redeemed dead at the funeral of D. L. Moody. I trow not. I wonder if it was a mere iridescent dream of an imaginative artist that made the flood light of the rising sun hover about the three empty crosses on the first Easter morn. I believe if the sunbeam sun was able to hide its face behind the black cloud on the day that Jesus was crucified that the same sun could change the beams of Christ's cross into bars of gold on the day that Jesus was resurrected. Let us think of that Easter morn and those significant crosses.

Let us, in the first place, turn our attention to the cross of condemnation which Jesus died. Why was this cross left standing amid the glories and the triumphs of Easter day? Why was it allowed to stand there to cast its dark shadow over the joy of Easter? As a ripen Christ? I think God left it standing there for a purpose. He is coming to you and me to-day to say: "My child, amid the songs of rejoicing which you are singing at this Easter season, amid the beautiful flowers with which you are decorating your churches, amid your shouts of triumph with which you are celebrating your sacred festal day, you must not forget the price Jesus Christ paid for your redemption? Let the smile be on the lip, but let my cross nestling out of the heart as the bubbling brook out of the green moss upon the mountain side, but let the cross upon which Jesus died always stand there to remind you of the agony and the sufferings and the shame of thorns with which Jesus purchased your redemption." The cross—oh, the empty cross of the first Easter morn! Who would want to pull it down from Golgotha on the morn Jesus was resurrected? Who would want to obliterate all the memories of the suffering of the atonement with which Christ obliterated warning, joy and triumph. The text is Mark xv, 27: "And with him they crucify two thieves, the one on his right hand and the other on his left."

The cross—oh, the empty cross of the first Easter morn! Who would want to pull it down from Golgotha on the morn Jesus was resurrected? Who would want to obliterate all the memories of the suffering of the atonement with which Christ obliterated warning, joy and triumph. The cross—oh, the cross, the empty cross of Jesus Christ, changed into great beams of gold by the Easter sun! Oh, let it stand in the centre of every church symbolizes the joy and the gospel triumph of Easter day!

But this empty cross of Jesus Christ teaches us another Easter lesson. It is a reminder of the glorious fact that, though for a little while the scepter of sin may seem to have the world for its kingdom, yet in the end eternal right shall surely triumph. It implies the promise that, though for a little while Christ's cross may appear the cross and hidden away in the tomb, yet there will surely come a day when he shall step out of his tomb and all his enemies shall be scattered, even as Easter morn chases away the darkness of the midnight.

It is not the power making the greatest noise which always has the greatest enduring strength. Neither is it the day of evil which has the longest twilight. "What are you making such a fuss about?" I said to a bitter January wind some years ago among the Michigan hills. "Oh," answered the wind, "I am going to bring down a blizzard from the far north. Then I am going to pile these fields up with great snowdrifts. Then I am going to freeze the lakes so thick with ice that the lumbermen can drive their sleds loaded down with heavy logs over them. Then I am going to freeze up the ground so tight that it will be as hard as rock. Then I am going to stop all the traffic upon the railroad tracks. And I am going to starve the snowbirds and the rabbits and freeze to death the deer in the forest ravines." Yes, I was going to hear the evening creatures tremble in terror before my tempter of ice." And well did they hear my wind howl for 3 days until the blizzards came. It blew until the fences disappeared under the tall snow. It blew until it seemed as though man must flee those Michigan hills for fear of his life. But finally the wind had exhausted all its fury and piled up the deep snowdrifts everywhere, and hung myriads of icy icicles from every tree branch quietly and gently like warm sun rays. Then the bright sunbeams kept kissing the snowflakes and kissing the snowflake and changing that like unto a bar of gold and that blade of grass into a diamond. And trees burrowing here and burrowing there and all after awhile that same sun brushed away every snow bank and began to woo the buds out of the trees and the grass out of the ground, and the sap began to flow, and the birds began to build their nests, and spring and summer took their place of the blizzards and the frosts of winter. Ah, it is not the power making the greatest noise which always has the most enduring strength.

"Aha!" cried the sabbath. "Aha!" cried the synagogue. "Aha!" cried the Roman proconsul, etc. "Aha!" cried the intrenched forces of sin. "We shall forever live and triumph if we can only slay that upon Calvary's cross." So what did they do? They united their forces of evil. They doffed and overrode every law of justice. They captured Jesus by night. They ran him to court and tried him by night, which was contrary to every known Hebrew and Roman usage. Then in the early morning they hanged him upon the cross. Then they stood at the foot of the cross and cried: "Aha! We, the powers of evil, have forever won! Aha! Satan, our denunciator, himself is dead!" And he was dead. Have you ever seen Rubens' greatest masterpiece, called "The Descent From the Cross?" Ah, that picture would break your heart. Dead Jesus was! When your little girl died and the kind friends washed her and dressed her and laid her on the white bier surrounded by flowers, it did not seem to you that she could be dead. There she lay with a smile on her face, just as you had seen her lying a hundred times before. And you had watched her you could almost see her breast heave and see her roll over in her sleep. Then you said: "She looks so beautiful to be put away in the dark grave!" But in Rubens' "Descent From the Cross" there is no doubt about the fact being dead. His skin is as ghastly as marble. The men as they are wrapping about him. The blue veins seem to be standing out like whipcords upon his forehead. His feet, his hands and his head seem to be hanging as heavy as sacks of lead. He could not have been more utterly beyond restoration if he had lain in his grave a thousand years. Speaking within three days within sight of his ghastly cross Jesus arose and walked and moved and lived and had his being. My friends, like the crucifers of old, you may be able to defy Christ for a little while, but remember the day of Christ's burial is to be followed by his day of resurrection. And that question of Pilate, "What shall I then do with Jesus which is called the Christ?" must find its echo in the heart of every man and woman. In his judgment seat Christ in the tomb means Christ coming to his resurrection. The empty cross of the first Easter morn proves it.

But there is another fact I want you to notice about the three crosses on Golgotha hill. It proves that even after a man has stained seventy times seven Christ is willing to pardon him of his sins if he will only throw himself upon the Saviour's mercy and love. Christ is not one who claims an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, a hand for a hand and a foot for a foot. He is not a Shylock demanding a full pound of flesh as the penalty for the heart because "it is so nominated in the bond." But Jesus is one who is willing to give a full forgiveness for the wrong if we are only willing to repent and lower at his feet. Except

BEWARE OF "DIGESTIVES"
THE ONLY WAY TO CURE STOMACH DISORDERS IS BY STRENGTHENING THE DIGESTIVE ORGANS.
The ordinary "pepsin tablet" has ruined more stomachs than all other causes combined. While it gives temporary relief it leaves the digestive system weaker than ever, and the victim is soon afflicted with the diseased frequency.
The only way to permanently cure stomach troubles is by strengthening the digestive organs with the kind of stomach tablet taken before meals, in this way the stomach prepares the proper food for the food and excites the secretion of the digestive juices, so that when the food is eaten, the stomach is prepared to digest it.
If Mi-o-na was a mere digestive, it would be taken after eating, so as to mix with the food, but then permanent cure would be impossible.
Mi-o-na stomach tablets are sold only by druggists, with the understanding that the purse or vest pocket, and cost 50 cents a box.
We absolutely agree that your money will be refunded if you should buy a box of Mi-o-na stomach tablets and not find them as we claim. Sold by druggists everywhere, or will be sent by mail on receipt of price by

FIGHTING THE SEA.

Holland's Continuous Performance Against Nature.

Holland is a country of wooden piles and dikes, for the people are perpetually fighting against the encroachments of water. One building in Amsterdam rests on no fewer than 13,620 piles. Though the Dutch "invented the town, which have been erected at enormous expense, effectually prevent any chance of a flood, while the streets of the flourishing port of Rotterdam are also frequently under water in the winter, when the quays of south Holland and in some parts of south Holland the people are compelled to do their shopping in boats.

When the Zuyder Zee breaks on to the land, those who wade up to their knees along the streets of a flooded village meet all manner of fish. This is explained by the fact that the Zuyder Zee, with its mud bottom, is literally crammed with finny tribes; and one authority states that if it were well scraped of all its fish one year, it would be full again the next.

The land of Holland is really of four distinct levels, and from ten to twelve feet between the highest and the lowest. In the days of the dry, the water is pumped from the lowest level to the one immediately above it, and so on, until the water has been returned again to the sea. A large number of engineers are specially engaged to look after the dikes, and any breach in the $2,500,000 is expended every year in keeping these fortifications against the sea in proper repair.

SOFT CRABS.

After Shedding the New Shells Hardon With Great Rapidity.

The supply of soft crabs for market is obtained by catching hard crabs and keeping them until they shed their shells. For this purpose large receptacles, usually made of slats and planking, are employed, and three or four times every day the stock on hand is examined. Soon after the hard crabs being picked out and packed without delay. They are put into shallow boxes, not more than three inches to thirty-five dozen in a box, according to the size of the animals. When the boxes are filled carefully the occupants may be kept alive from one to seventy hours after leaving the water. They have been shipped all the way from the Chesapeake to Boston, arriving at their destination in good condition, in summer, of course, ice is used.

But where soft crabs are in demand it is necessary that they shall reach the market quickly, because their new shells harden with the passing hours. At the end of twelve hours the shells are like parchment, and in three or four days the crab is as hard as ever—hence unfit for use in the form most highly approved by epicures.

Some Entries Made During His Exile on St. Helena.

There was recently sold in London the last book of accounts of Napoleon at St. Helena, from 1815 to 1821. The expenses are classified by month and week, kept by Pierron, the ex-emperor's native d'hotel, with entries by Montholon.

There are many corrections in pencil by the august exile himself, for he verified all the accounts and changed English money, where it was used, into francs. Some of the entries are most interesting. Thus, on Aug. 15, 1815, the fete of the emperor, here is one by Montholon: "Artificial flowers, 6 francs. Extraordinary expenses, 11 5s."

Napoleon's resources at St. Helena were very modest, but his tradesmen, as regarded their prices, were very high as he was an emperor—though an exiled one. Among other occupations to while away the time he was going in heavily on his hands, Napoleon went in for gardening, and among the entries are "Seeds for vegetable garden, 11 8s.; 2 pairs of pruners, 4s; 2 axes, 4f. 10c."—prices which look as if the "Little Corporal" expended as a subject for fleecing. "For mending the emperor's bed" £2 is charged.

Toward the end of his life Napoleon's nourishment consisted almost entirely of chickens, pigeons, and eggs, and there are numerous entries for medicines. In March, 1821, for instance, thirty bottles of syrup, one case of oranges, two cases of Burgundy plums; in April, ten bottles of syrup, 1,000 dozen oranges, eight dozen lemons.—London Globe.

ENGLISH SPAVIN LINIMENT removes all hard, soft or calloused lumps and blemishes from horses, blood spavin, curb, splints, ringbone, sweenny, stifles, sprains, sore and swollen throat, coughs, etc. Save $50 by use of one bottle. "So your servant girl has left you again?" said Mrs. Naybor.

"Yes," replied Mrs. Bobobi.

"What was the matter?"

"She didn't like the way I did the work."

A party of Scotsmen in Springfield lately celebrated the anniversary of Burns' birthday, and evidently were the steps by which he became a poet. One Scot had the whisky and called for help from the waiter in the morning. One Scot: "The would-be good Samaritan tried to straighten him up, but he would not open the fallen one, and then seized him by the throat and"

A runna help you up, but A will tie down and"

The You are the only girl I ever loved."

Then a mandolin twang. Pa and Ma take Sister Jane's beau for Johnny. Pa is served with great deliberation after" [illegible]

Jessie had kept them as secret as" [illegible]

Ha! I wonder if they thought they" [illegible] "Children of the Heather." If we had a few pieces of one of those pieces of work as having a saving grace in their touch? Perhaps we might. Perhaps that is the reason God has made all parts of those crosses disappear. Perhaps that complete disappearance of those crosses God is now saying to us on this Easter day: "Children of the twentieth century, knowest thou not that there are no crosses in My midst to-day? They are not empty crosses either. The centre cross holds Jesus. One of the thieves represents the penitent sinner. The other outside cross holds the impenitent thief. Thou, O child, must mount one of those crosses. Thou, O child, must carry one of those crosses! Thou alone can choose which one it shall be. Which cross shall be for Judas? Then please must decide the question to-day." Which cross did they crucified two thieves, one on his right hand and the other on his left." Oh, my friend, wilt thou not this Easter bravely and nobly carry the cross of the repentant thief?

From Boston.

"Did you hear that?" said a young woman to her companion at a well known fashionable hotel. "That waiter on the next table asked for 'mashed potatoes,' and I am perfectly sure that he came from Pennsylvania. I know that if we could hear his conversation we would find him saying 'wait on' for 'wait for,' and invariably using 'leave' for 'let,' and vice versa."

DAIRYING INTERESTS.

More attention has been paid to the Dairying interests at this session of the Legislature than perhaps at any other devoted to it for many years. The Premier has also the fact that Mr. F. S. Pearson, president of the Dairymen Dairymen's Association, is a member of the House as the representative for Simcoe. This is something of an advantage, as a more greater assistance from the Government in the way of legislation affecting this immense industry. Its importance is not appreciated, but the difficulty in the past has been that its true importance has never been brought clearly before the outside the Houses of Parliament, and consequently the attention of those engaged in the industry. The Legislature has therefore failed to take the steps necessary in the Fruit and Vegetable Growers' Association, and the various and exhibitions of all kinds. The daily interests have also received more attention under the old Government, but this session the industry has been given a boost that will impress its importance on the minds of many who were ignorant of the immense industry.

The credit is directly due to the persistent efforts of Mr. Dargavel, who has worked in the interests of the dairymen in a manner that reflects the highest credit on him. In 1905 there were 900 cheese factories east of Toronto making cheese, and the Canadian Dairyman says there was manufactured 1,209,976,893 pounds of milk, which in the form of cheese, having a market value of $12,204,856. Of course this does not represent the full value of the industry as many factories do not send in any returns. In the district east of Toronto there were also operated 25 creameries, that produced butter the value of over $106,000 in cash to the farmers. Taking the average cow at 4,000 pounds per year there are about 3,000 cows in east of Toronto, and the output, based on the average for several years can not be valued at less than $16,000,000 This is independent of the milk product output.

The significance of this immense industry and its bearing upon the prosperity of Canada, particularly Ontario, have been under estimated by the Government. Commissioner Hanna, for example $29,000 was spent in connection with the dairying instruction in the section east of Toronto. Of this amount $6,000 was to assist in the erection of a dairy building at Ottawa, $2,000 for the Eastern Dairymen's Association, and $6,500 for the Eastern Dairy School.

The fact was patent to Hon. Nelson Monteith, Minister of Agriculture, that some of the products of the Eastern section were not up to the standard, and this had an ulterior effect upon the cheese and butter trade Ontario as a whole. It affected it in reputation in the British markets and consequently in price. Mr. Dargavel pointed out that it involved the same amount of good material to make the good article as it did the bad one, and that those who needed instruction most were, as a rule, the farmers in all of the way to want it or receive it. The suggestion was made to the Minister that the whole question of dairy instruction should be taken out of the hands of the Dairy Associations and placed in the hands of the Government. The Government would have to forego the $12,500 paid by the Associations, but economies towards the cost of instruction, but this was a minor thing. The great necessity was uniformity of standard and the adoption and enforcement of the most approved methods of manufacture was considered.

As a result of the efforts of Mr. Dargavel the whole question of dairy instruction has been taken over with the purpose of placing the cheese and butter industry of the Province of Ontario on the high plan of excellence where the products shall be second to none in the world.

WHAT TO DO AT A WEDDING.

Every once in a while there is a newspaper article on "Correct wedding." "Marriage customs among the Australian Aborigines," or something of that sort, which is always read with "how barbarous!" I wonder what the Australian Aborigines would think if they should read some of the articles on etiquette—for instance, the pair are invited to a wedding. They get there with grains of rice in their pockets, and when the bride's head is bowed in prayer they shower it on her. Or they throw embroidered cushion by the window for the bride to step on. Or, if they are Japanese, too—during bridal or at an elaborate wedding—they throw the ceremonial cheese at the wedding.—The Delineator.

Everybody Agrees

that COD LIVER OIL and HYPOPHOSPHITES are the most valuable combination known. Then why does not everybody take Cod Liver Oil and Iron? Simply because people cannot take the Oil and few can digest the Iron in any ordinary form. These difficulties have been entirely removed by the introduction of FERROL, in which the Oil is scientifically emulsified with the Oil, rendering the Oil palatable and the Iron digestible. While is manufactured from the best grades of Cod Liver Oil (the white of the Oil) and is richer in oil than any other emulsion, and while it contains just the right quantity of the Hypophosphites of Lime and Phosphorus, it is so scientifically prepared that the most persons a thrive, and finds any trouble in taking it, and infants digest it without difficulty. Moreover the well-known valued of the Oil and Iron is immensely enhanced by the process of manufacture, and as the formula is freely exposed it is not to be wondered at that physicians everywhere have fully endorsed FERROL, and use it largely in their practice. FERROL is invaluable for the treatment of any kind of Lung or Bronchial troubles, while for wasting diseases it has no equal, and

FERROL

Their use has demonstrated that they thoroughly purify the blood, and correct all morbid accumulations from the system. They are easy to take, and their action is mild and gentle but sure.

Pat—Well, Mike, what do you think of Woman's Rights?

Mike—Pat, I'm not so scared of their rights as I am of me ould wife's wrongs.

The merits of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup as a sure remedy for coughs, colds and consumption are endorsed by those who know its power in giving relief. Mrs. Wm. Hall, Bloomfield, says: "I was troubled with a cough for a long time, and tried many remedies without relief. Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup was the first one I used that gave me relief, and after using a few bottles I was entirely cured." Price, 25 cents, at all dealers.

"I notice, Major," said the inquisitive man, "that you always take your whiskey straight. Don't you Kentuckians ever put anything in your liquor?"

"Some Kentuckians do, sah," replied Major Bluegrass.

"Indeed?"

"Yes, sah; but they sell it."

Is the Farmer's Friend.—The farmer will find in Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil a potent remedy for wounds or any form of burn and quick relief for the respiratory organs and for household use generally. He will also find it a convenient friend in treating internal troubles, colds, or sore throat, when attacked by colds, coughs or any internal ailments to which they are subject.

"I am afraid of this crying about, my little man," said the visitor.

"I'm not," said four-year-old Tom. "Come, come—stop crying! Here's a penny for you. See how glad you happen to lose your money?"

"I'm glad it isn't my penny—yet."

Those two desirable qualifications, pleasant to the taste and at the same time effectual, are to be found in Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator. Children like it.

In an Irish court recently an old man was called into the witness-box, and the usual questions as to name and address went too far in more than one instance. Instead of going up the stairs that led to the box he mounted those that led to the Bench. Said the Judge, good-humoredly:

"I don't think you want to be, my good man."

"Ah, sure, your Honor," was the reply. "I'm an old man now, and I'm afraid I'll be tired."

The Judge had no ready retort.

Where all other cure preparations fail, try Bollard's Hyposphites Emulsion, and no inconvenience or cause for delay.

Ha—No, I can never be yours.

She—Then you have been untrue.

She, hastily—Now, don't go off mad, George, like a man.

A young man who had a silent admiration for a young lady went with the intention of proposing to her one evening last week. He sat there for a long while, but at last, with a great effort, he managed to say:

"There's a feather on your dress, Miss Jones."

"No wonder," she said: "I've been sitting on a goose all night."

"Jane," asked Mrs. Hinson Often, "are the eggs boiling?"

"Yes, mum, they're biling, mum," replied the new servant, lately from the country, "but I can't get the hens to tell which the eggs are consorted in."

Speaking with a young lady, of good family, recently, that he had failed to keep abreast of the scientific age, Mr. Gaddis, of Bloomfield, remarked, "I don't know at all how the industrial problem is to be solved which is used in some buildings is produced."

"Why, Johnny," said the fond mother, "you just turn a button, and the light turns on."

"Yes—it, as you say, Pearl is much more easily dealt with than many an."

Jane—"Do you ever realize the joys of life until he marries."

Clara—"I don't. It's too late to return to them."

Corporation of the Town of Napanee

Napanee, March 19th, 1907.

TO THE MAYOR AND COUNCIL OF THE TOWN OF NAPANEE:

Gentlemen,—We, your auditors, having completed our examination of the books of your Treasurer from the 18th Dec., 1906, to 31st Dec., 1906, and the books of the Treasurer of the School Board from Sept. to 31st Dec., 18-6, beg to report as follows:

We find your Treasurer has proper vouchers for all receipts and proper authority and vouchers for all expenditure, and we present you herewith with a detailed statement of all receipts and expenditure together with a statement of the debentures debt of the town, and also a statement of the assets and liabilities.

We would respectfully call your attention to the fact that this statement with which we present you is not according to the usual form of cash book, but a continuation of the statement prepared by Mr. W. F. Hall and your Finance Committee when the books were in confusion, after they were transferred. There is considerable difference between the distribution of the receipts and payments as shown by the statement at the end of the cash book. This is owing to the change in the regular and proper entries in the cash book, and which was corrected by Mr. Hall and your Finance Committee.

The Treasurer has evidently ignored a cash balance of $70.06, which was shown as cash on hand on the 18th Dec., last which was not handed over to him by the late Treasurer, Mr. Mill.

This balance should have been brought forward and carried as cash until it was produced or disposed of in a proper way.

The treasurer of the school board has proper authority and vouchers for all items of receipts and expenditures, and his books are all in order.

All of which we respectfully submit,

P. GLEESON, A. ALEXANDER, } Auditors.

WHAT TO DO AT A WEDDING.

Every once in a while one sees a newspaper article on "Wedding Customs" or "Marriage customs among the Australian Aborigines" or some such thing of that kind, and we say, "Dear me! how interesting!" and we read about the Caveat bride or the Australian native, and say if they think they have such daily papers of our wedding customs they are mistaken. Why, we are born even to the train by merry makers who pelt us with rice and cast-off shoes, and we are "sped" and cast-off shoes, and we are "sped" on our way by the "old folks" at home, who have to often carried on a tray or passed out rumbling rice and old shoes, and who walks in front of the bridal party to the church. Then there is the "best man, often cast as much as the bride's maid, and who, in the case of extravagance is considered in the right of his position, to pay the railway fare. He is invited all contribute to furnish forth the wedding feast. Really, all our customs are quite as unique, interesting, and perhaps some of us, to those who have not seen them at the event, would feel no stranger at a native wedding than we do at an aboriginal ceremony then at the conventional "church" wedding.—The Outlook.

FERROL

is manufactured from the best quality of Cod Liver Oil (the whole of the Oil) and is richer in oil than any other Emulsion, and while it contains the full right quantity of the best form of Iron and Phosphorus, it is so scientifically prepared that it is easily taken and will not send foods any trouble in taking it, and will quickly digest in the weakest stomach. Moreover the well-established value of the Oil and Iron is immensely enhanced by the process of manufacture, and as the formula is freely expressed it is not to be wondered at that FERROL is everywhere to have fully endorsed FERROL and used it largely in their practice. FERROL is invaluable for the treatment of any kind of Lung or Bronchial troubles, while for wasting diseases it has no equal, and

In an Irish court recently an old man was asked into the witness-box and being inform and just a little blind he went too far. He more than one sense. Instead of going up the aisle that led to the box he mounted those that led to the Bench. Said the judge, with an odd man now and twice it's all I'm fit for."

A young man who has a silent admiration for a young lady went with her to church one evening. He was delighted. He sat during the hour he was with her. But, when he had to kneel down suddenly, he bracketed:

"Oh, I've a hole in your dress, Mary!"

I wonder," she said; "I've been sitting next a goose all night!"

"Jane," asked Mrs. Hiram Often, "have you been sprinkling?"

"Most assuredly not, madam," replied the new servant, gently from her face, "but I may safely say the water has been applied externally."

Speaking with a young lady, a gentleman mentioned that he had fallen in love with the beautiful Spanish name Dolores. "Why, for instance," he added, "I know all about the name, the pronunciation exactly right which is now more than I can say for the lady herself." "Oh, it is very simple," said the lady, "it is only the name of the month in which the light appears at once."

We would respectfully call your attention to the fact that this statement with which we present you is according to the treasurer's cash book, but a continuation of the statement prepared by Mr. W. F. Hall and the Finance Committee, whose books were in confusion before they were transferred. There is considerable difference between the balance shown in the treasurer's statement as presented and that of the cash book. This is owing in the main to irregular and improper entries in the cash book, and which was corrected by Mr. Hall and your Finance Committee.

The treasurer has evidently figured a cash balance of $70.86, which was shown as cash on hand on the 15th Dec., but which was not handed over to him by the late Treasurer, Mr. Mills.

The balance should have been brought forward and carried as cash until it was produced or disposed of in a proper way.

The Treasurer of the school board has proper authority and vouchers for all items of receipts and expenditures, and his books are all in order.

All of which we respectfully submit,

P. GLEESON, A. ALEXANDER, } Auditors.

there was a prospect of my regaining my freedom if certain expenses could be met; the money would be the best peace of mind, happiness, self-respect —everything. I knew Sir Charles's generosity, and I thought that if he heard the story from my own lips he would help me."

"Then how is it that you did not go?"

"Because I received help in the interval from another source."

"Why, then, did you not write to Sir Charles and explain this?"

"So I should have done had I not seen his death in the paper next morning."

The woman's story hung coherently together, and all my questions were unable to shake it. I could only check it by finding if she had, indeed, instituted divorce proceedings against her husband at or about the time of the tragedy.

It was unlikely that she would dare to say that she had not been to Baskerville Hall if she really had been, for a gap would be necessary to take that night, and could not have returned to Coombe Tracey until the early hours of the morning. Such an excursion could not be kept secret. The probability was, therefore, that she was telling the truth, or, at least, a part of the truth. I was not baffled and disheartened. Once again I had reached that dead wall which seemed to be built across every path, but I was determined to get at the object of my mission. And yet the more I thought of the lady's face and of her manner the more I felt that something was being held back from me. Why should she turn so pale? Why should she fight against every admission until it was forced from her? Why should she have been so reticent at the time of the tragedy? Surely explanations of that kind could not be as innocent as she would have me believe. Finally, the argument I could proceed no farther in that direction, but must turn back to that other clue which was to be sought for among the stone huts upon the moor.

And that was a most vague direction. I realized it as I drove back and noted how the afternoon sun shed tints of the ancient people. Barrymore's only indication had been that the stranger lived in one of these abandoned huts, and many hundreds of them are scattered throughout the length and breadth of the moor. But I had my own experience for a guide, since it had shown me the man himself standing upon the summit of the black Tor. That there should be the centre of my search. From there I should explore every hut upon the moor until I lighted upon the right one. If this man were inside it I should find out from him his own line, at the point of my revolver if necessary, who he was and why a little dwarf dogged me so long. He might slip away from us in the crowd of Regent Street, but it would puzzle him to do so upon the lonely moor. On the other hand, if I should find the hut and its tenant should not be within it I must remain there, however long the vigil, until he returned. Holmes had pressed him to London. It would indeed be a triumph for me if I could run him to earth, where my master had failed.

Luck had been against us again and again in this inquiry, but now at last it came to my aid. And the messenger of good fortune was none other than Mr. Frankland, who stood framed in grey wikekered and red-faced, outside the gate of his garden, where he peered on to the high road along which I travelled.

"Good-day, Dr. Watson," cried he, with unwonted good humor, "you must really drive yet further and stretch your legs in to have a glass of wine and to congratulate me."

My feelings towards him were far from being friendly after what I had heard of his treatment of his neighbors, but I was anxious to send Perkins and the waggonette home, and the opportunity was a good one. I alighted and sent a message to Sir Henry that I should walk over in time for dinner. Then I followed Frankland into his dining-room.

"It is a great day for me, sir—one of the red-letter days of my life," he cried, with effusion. "I have at last brought off a double event. I mean to teach them in these parts that law is law, and that a man here who does not fear to invoke it. I have established a right of way through the centre of old Middleton's park, slap across it, sir, within a hundred yards of his own front door. What do you think of that? We'll teach these magnates that they cannot defy the laws over the rights of the commoners, confound them! And I've closed two wood where the Perkworthy folk used to picnic. These infernal people seem to think that to be rude is the right of property, and that they can swarm where they like with their papers and their bottles. Both cases decided, Dr. Watson, and both in my favor. I fancy I've struck a day since I had Sir John Morland for trespass, because he shot in his own warren."

"How on earth did you do that?"

"Look it up in the books, sir. It will repay reading. Frankland v. Morland, Court of Queen's Bench. It cost me £200, but I got my verdict."

"Did it do you any good?"

"None, sir, none. I am proud to say that I had no interest in the matter. I act entirely from the point of public duty. I have no doubt, for example, that the Perkworthy people will have me in effigy to-night. I told the police last time they broke it that they should stop these disgraceful exhibitions. The County Constabulary is in a scandalous state, sir, and I do not intend to allow the the protection to which I am entitled. The case of Frankland v. Regina will bring the matter before the attention of the public. I told them that they would have occasion to regret their treatment of me, and already my words have come true."

"How so?" I asked.

The old man put on a very knowing expression.

"Because I could tell them" what they are dying to know; but nothing would induce me to help the police in any way."

I had been casting round for some excuse by which I could get away from his gossip, but now I began to wish to hear more of it. I had seen enough of the contrary nature of the old sinner to understand that a very strong sign of interest would be the surest way to stop his confidences.

"Some poaching case, no doubt?" said I, with an indifferent manner.

"No, sir, no; a very much more important matter than that! What about the convict on the moor?"

I started, and don't doubt that you know where he is?" said I.

"I may not know exactly where he is but I am quite sure that I could help the police to lay their hands on him. Has it never struck you that the way to catch that man was to find out where he got his food, and so trace it to him?"

He certainly seemed to be getting uncomfortably near the truth. "No doubt," said I; "but how do you know that he is anywhere upon the moor?"

"I know it because I have seen with my own eyes the messenger who takes him his food."

My heart sank for Barrymore. It was a serious thing to be in the power of this spiteful old busybody. But his next remark took a weight from my mind.

"You'll be surprised to hear that his food is taken to a boy by a child. I see him every day through my telescope upon the top of my house. He passes along the same path at the same hour, and to whom should he be going except to his convict?"

Here was luck indeed! And yet I suppressed all appearance of interest. A child! Barrymore had said that our unknown was supplied by a boy. It was on his track, and not upon that of the convict's, that Frankland had stumbled. It was good, got his knowledge it might save me a long and weary hunt. But carefully and indifference were evidently the watchwords.

I should say that it was much more likely that it was the son or one of the moorland shepherds taking out his father's dinner."

A look of appearance of opposition struck fire out of the old autocrat. His prominent eyes looked malignantly out of grey whiskers bristled like those of an angry cat.

"Indeed, sir!" said he, pointing out over the wide-stretching moor. Do you see that black Tor over yonder? Well, do you see the lower hill beyond with the thornbrush upon it? It is the stoniest part of the whole moor. All a place where a shepherd would be like. To the back window, I say, and I tell you that I have seen that boy again and again with his bundle. Every day, and sometimes twice a day, I have been able—but wait a moment, Dr. Watson. Do my eyes deceive me, or is there at the present moment a convict missing upon that hill-side?"

It was even so. Seen off, but I could distinctly see a small dark dot against the dull green and grey.

"Come, come!" cried Frankland, flushing upstairs. "You will see with your own eyes and judge for yourself."

The telescope, a formidable instrument mounted upon a tripod, stood upon the flat leads of the house. Frankland fixed it upon the range and gave a cry of satisfaction.

"Quick, Dr. Watson, quick, before he vanishes over the hill!"

There he was, sure enough, a small undersized, a little bundle upon his shoulder, toiling slowing up the hill. When he reached the crest I saw the outline of his figure outlined for an instant against the cold blue sky. He looked round behind him, and then a stealthy air, as one who dreads pursuit. Then he vanished over the hill.

"Well, am I right?"

"Certainly, there is a boy who seems to correspond with your account."

"And what the errand is even a county constable could guess. But not a word to the wise. We'll see how me, and I bted you in secrecy also, Dr. Watson. Not a word! You understand!"

"Just as you wish."

"They have treated me shamefully, shamefully! When the facts come out in Frankland v. Regina I venture to think that a thrill of indignation will run through the country. Nothing would induce me to help the police in this matter. They have set me at nought, have been me, instead of my effigy, which these rascals burned in the stake. Surely you are not going! You will help me to empty the decanter in honour of this great occasion!"

But I resisted all his solicitations and succeeded in dissuading him from his announced intention of walking home with me. I kept the road as long as its curves led me and then I struck off across the moor and made my way towards that point where the boy had disappeared. Everything was working in my favor, and I swore that it should not be through lack of energy or perseverance that I should miss the chance which Fortune had thrown in my way.

The sun was already sinking when I reached the summit of the hill, and the long slopes beneath me were all golden-green on one side and grey shadow on the other. A haze lay low upon the farthest sky-line, out of which jutted the fantastic shapes of the bellying and Vixen Tor. Over the wide expanse there was no sound and no movement. One great grey bird, a gull or curlew, soared aloft in the blue Heaven. He was the only thing that moved in the whole landscape except the huge arch of the sky and the desert beneath it. The barren scene, the sense of loneliness, and the mystery and urgency of my task combined to overpower me. The boy was nowhere to be seen. But down beneath me in a cleft of the hills there was a circle of the old stone huts, and in the middle of them there was one which retained its roof and was fit to act as a screen against the weather. My lodestone lay within, and I saw it. This must be the burrow where the stranger lurked. At last my foot was upon the threshold of the mystery. His secret was within my grasp.

I stooped and tiptoed my way across the open space, like a cat upon the trail of a bird. I paused at the door and listened. I could hear someone moaning within, and the sound of subdued voice. I stooped under the low doorway and looked in.

The interior was dark and gloomy. In the middle of the hut a fat stone served the purpose of a table, upon which this stood a small cloth bundle—the same, no doubt, which I had seen through the telescope upon the shoulder of the boy. It contained a loaf of bread, a pie-dish full of pickled fish and two preserved peaches. As I set it down again, after having examined it, my heart leaped to see that beneath it there lay a sheet of paper with writing upon it. Hastily clutching it up, I read, roughly scrawled in pencil:—

"Dr. Watson has gone to Coombe Tracey."

For a minute I stood there with the paper in my hands thinking out the meaning of this curt message. It was clear, then, that Sir Henry, who was being dogged by this secret man. He must have followed me himself, but he had set an agent on his track, perhaps upon my track, and this was his report. During all the time that a step since I had been upon the moor which had not been observed and repeated. Always there was the feeling of an unseen force, a fine net drawn round us with infinite skill and delicacy, holding us so lightly that it was only at some supreme moment that one realised that one was entangled in its meshes.

If there was one report there might be others, so I looked round the hut in search of them. There was no trace. However, of anything of the kind, I could I discover any sign which might throw light upon the question as to who the man who lived in this singular place, save that he must be a lover of Spartan habits, and cared little for the comforts of life. When I thought of the heavy rains and mists which settle in spring root I understood how strong and waterproof must be the roof under which had kept him in that inhospitable hut. This was no mere temporary lair, or was he by chance under the special angel? I swore that I would not leave the hut until I knew.

Outside the sun was sinking low and the west was blazing with scarlet and gold. Its reflection in the little pools of the bottom of the valley made it look like a river of blood. Down in the direction of the village of Grimpen. Between the two, behind the hills, I could see the gleaming roof I understood how strong and waterproof must be the roof under which had kept him in that inhospitable hut. This was no mere temporary lair, or was he by chance under the special angel? I swore that I would not leave the hut until I knew.

Outside the sun was sinking low and the west was blazing with scarlet and gold. Its reflection in the little pools of the bottom of the valley made it look like a river of blood. Down in the direction of the village of Grimpen. Between the two, behind the hills, I could see the gleaming roof of Stapletons. All was sweet and mellow and peaceful in the golden evening light, and yet as I looked at those innocent signs of the peace of nature, but quivered at the vagueness and the terror of that interview which every instant was bringing nearer. With tingling nerves, but a fixed purpose, I sat in the dark recess of the hut and waited with sombre patience for the coming of its tenant.

And then at last I heard him. Far away came the sharp clink of a boot striking a stone. Then another and yet another, each nearer than the last. Finally a long pause which showed that he had stopped. Then once more the footsteps approached and a shadow fell across the opening of the hut.

"It is a lovely evening, my dear Watson," said a well-known voice. "I really think that you will be more comfortable outside than in."

CHAPTER XII.

For a moment or two I sat breathless, hardly able to believe my ears. Then my memory and my voice came back to me, while a crushing weight of responsibility seemed in an instant to roll off my mind. In spite of the incisive, ironical voice could belong to none save to one man.

"Holmes!" I cried—"Holmes!"

"Come out," said he, "and please be careful with the revolver."

I stooped under the rude lintel, and there he sat upon a stone outside, his grey eyes dancing with amusement as they fell upon my astonished features. He was thin and worn, but clear and alert, his keen face bronzed by the sun and roughened by the wind. In his tweed suit and cloth cap he looked like any other tourist upon the moor, and he had contrived, with that catlike love of personal cleanliness which was one of his characteristics, that his chin should be as smooth and his linen as perfect as if he were in Baker Street.

"I never was more glad to see anyone in my life," said I, as I wrung him by the hand.

"Or more astonished, eh?"

"Well, I must confess to it."

"The surprise was not all on one side, I assure you. I had no idea that you had found me out, particularly as I still less that you were inside it, until I was within twenty paces of the door."

"My footprint, I presume?"

"No, Watson, I fear that I would not undertake to recognize your footprint amid all the footprints of the world. If you seriously desire to deceive me you must change your tobacconist; for when I see the stub of a cigarette marked Bradley, Oxford Street, I know that my friend Watson is in the neighborhood. Good old Watson! You are the one fixed point in a changing world. Dear old boy, you don't mind my coming down and visiting you, I hope?"

"I am overjoyed to see you."

"And you will not betray me by telling anyone that I am living?"

"What am I to say, then, when I see them asking for you?"

"You can tell them the truth, sir. I have no wish to hide it. I only ask you to say nothing at all about me."

"I will do exactly what you think best, Holmes."

"You will find me a somewhat changed man, Watson. Even your affectionate regard would not help you to recognize me. Will you shake hands?"

We exchanged a long hand-clasp, and I felt that, standing as he was under the full sunlight, he was regarding me keenly to see how I had stood the shock.

"You've been in my mind these years," said he.

"And you in mine, I fear."

"But you have surely left many friends behind you in London. You have not been overlooked. Even Mycroft has not been overlooked. Even Mycroft has not been able to keep pace with me. Ah, I see that you have still got it!" He pounced upon my hand and turned my wrist round so that he could see the underside of my watch. I laughed at the quickness of his recognition.

"Of course you remember Mycroft's boast that there was only one occasion in his life upon which he had been taken by surprise, and that he was perfectly prepared to meet the case of my sudden return to life. I fancy that I see him open that parcel in your room."

"I have no doubt that he was astonished."

"I had to write you down a madman in order to give completeness to the mystery. I am sorry to have inflicted such pain upon you, my dear friend, for I can appreciate your feelings best of all. But I was absolutely compelled to do it. How many times have you said that I owed my success to my power of taking advantage of other people's mistakes? It was the one thing which I could do best. I knew well that you would never rest until you had cleared my memory, and I was compelled to choose between letting you fail in your duty and allowing you to mourn me. Of the two I thought it best that you should mourn."

"I have indeed mourned for you."

"And now tell me how you came to find me out in Frankland v. Regina. I venture to think that a thrill of indignation will run through the country. Nothing would induce me to help the police in this matter. They have set me at nought, have been me, instead of my effigy, which these rascals burned at the stake. Surely you are not going! We exchanged a long hand-clasp, and I felt that, standing as he was under the full sunlight, he was regarding me keenly to see how I had stood the shock.

I shrank back into the darkest corner and cocked the pistol in my pocket.

"You've been in Dartmoor before now, Watson," said he, smiling at my horrified expression.

"But how—"

"Why, of course you have been there, or you would never have known that the moor was haunted."

"I believe that you are right."

"Then you have me, and yet do not trust me? I cried, with some bitterness. "I think that I have deserved better at your hands, Holmes."

"My dear fellow, you have been invaluable to me in this as in many other cases, and I beg that you will forgive me if I have seemed to play a trick upon you. In truth, it was partly for your own sake that I did it, and I knew that my appreciation of the danger which you ran which led me to come down and examine the matter for myself. Had I been with Sir Henry and you it is confident that my point of view would have been the same as yours, and my presence would have warned our very formidable opponents to be on their guard. As it is, I have been able to get about as I could not possibly have done had I been living in the Hall, and I remain an unknown factor in the business, ready to throw in all my weight at a critical moment."

"But why keep me in the dark?"

"For you to know could not have helped us, and might possibly have led to my discovery. You would have wished to tell me something, or in your kindness you would have brought me out some comfort or other, and so an unnecessary risk would be run. I brought Cartwright down with me—you remember the little page at the Express Office—and he has seen after my simple wants: a loaf of bread and a clean collar. What does man want more? He has given me an extra pair of eyes upon a very active pair of feet, and both have been invaluable."

"Then my reports have all been wasted!"—My voice trembled as I recalled the pains and the pride with which I had composed them.

Holmes took a bundle of papers from his pocket.

"Here are your reports, my dear fellow, and very well thumbed, I assure you. I have not had time for comments, and they are only delayed one day upon their way. Your compliment upon exceedingly upon the zeal and the intelligence which you have shown upon an extraordinary difficult case."

I was still rather raw over the deception which had been practised upon me, but the warmth of Holmes's praise drove my anger from my mind. I felt also in my heart that I had done well what he said and that it was really best for our purpose that I should not have known that he was upon the moor.

"That's better," said he, seeing the shadow rise from my face. "And now tell me this about the man Stapleton with Laura Lyons—it was not difficult for me to guess that it was to see her that you made that journey to Coombe Tracey, since you have already established that she is the one person in Coombe Tracey who might be of service to us in the matter. In fact, if you had not gone to-day it is exceedingly probable that I should have gone to-morrow."

The sun had set and dusk was setting in rapidly. A chill wind blew over the moor

"Well, then, to-night?"

"We are not much better off to-night. Again, there was no direct connection between the hound and the man's death, we never saw the hound. We heard ill—but we could not prove that it was running upon this man's trail. There is a complete absence of motive. No, my dear fellow; we must reconcile ourselves to the fact that we have no case at present, and that it is worth our while to run any risk in order to establish one."

"And how do you propose to do so?"

"I have great hopes of you, Mrs. Laura Lyons dog do for us when the position of affairs is made clear to her. And I have my own plan as well. Sufficient for to-morrow is the evil thereof; but I hope before the day is past to have the upper hand at last."

I could draw nothing further from him, and he walked, lost in thought, as far as the Baskerville gates.

"Are you coming up?"

"Yes; I see no reason for further concealment. But one last word, Watson. Say nothing of the hound to Sir Henry. Let him think that Selden's death was a Stapleton would have us believe. He will have a better nerve for the ordeal which he will have to undergo to-morrow, when he is engaged, if I remember your report aright, to dine with these people."

"And so am I."

"Then you must excuse yourself and he must go alone. That will be easily arranged. And now, if we are too late for dinner, I think that we are both ready for our suppers."

Sir Henry was more pleased than surprised to see Sherlock Holmes, for he had for some days been expecting that event, and was dressing when I came down from London. He did raise his eyebrows, however, when he found that my friend had neither any luggage nor any explanations for his presence. Between us we soon supplied his wants, and then over a belated supper we explained to the baronet as much of our experience as it seemed desirable that he should know. But first I had the unpleasant duty of breaking the news to Barrymore and his wife. To him it may have been an unmitigated relief, but she wept bitterly in her apron. To all the world he was the man of violence, half animal and half demon; but to her he always remained the little wilful boy of her own girlhood, the child who had clung to her hand. Evil indeed is the man who has not one woman to mourn him.

"I've been moping in the house all day since Watson went off in the morning," said the baronet. "I guess I should have some credit, for I have kept my promise. If I hadn't sworn not to go about alone I might have had a mere lively evening, for I had a message from Stapleton asking me over there."

"I have no doubt that you would have had a more lively evening," said Holmes, drily. "By the way, I don't suppose you appreciate that we have been dogging over you as having broken your neck?"

Sir Henry opened his eyes. "How was that?"

"This poor wretch was dressed in your clothes. I fear your servant who gave them to him may get into trouble with the police."

"That is unlikely. There was no mark on any of them, as far as I know."

"That's lucky for him—in fact, it's lucky for all of you, since you are all on the witness list in this unpleasant matter. I am not sure that as a conscientious detective my first duty is not to arrest the whole household. Watson's reports are most incriminating documents."

"But how about the case?" asked the baronet. "Have you made anything out of the tangle? I know any confidence Watson and I are much the wiser since we came down."

"I think that I shall be in a position to make the situation rather more clear to you before long. It has been an exceedingly difficult and most complicated business. There are several points upon which we still want light—but it is coming all the same.

"We've had one experience, as Watson has no doubt told you. We heard the hound on the moor, so I can testify that it is not all empty superstition. I had something to do with dogs when I was out West, and I know one when I hear one. If you can muzzle that one and put him on a chain I'll be ready to swear you are the greatest detective of all time."

"I think I will muzzle him and chain him all right if you will give me your help."

"Whatever you tell me to do I will do."

"Very good; and I will ask you also to go it blindly, without always asking the reasons."

"Just as you like."

"If you will do this I think the chances are that our little difficulties will soon be solved. I have no doubt."

He stopped suddenly and stared fixedly up over my head into the air. The lamp built upon his face, and never have I seen it and so still that it might have been that of a clever Indian bronze statue, a personification of alertness and expectation.

"What is it?" we both cried.

I could see as he looked down that he was resuming some internal emotion. His features were still composed, but his eyes shone with amused exultation.

"Excuse the admiration of a connoisseur," said he, as he waved his hand towards the line of family portraits which covered the opposite wall. "Watson won't allow that I know anything of art, but really there is more jealousy, because our views upon the subject differ. Now, these are a really very fine series of portraits."

"Well, I'm glad to hear you say so," said Sir Henry, glancing with some surprise at my friend. "I don't pretend to know much about such things, and I'd be a better judge of a horse or a stver than of a picture. I didn't know that you found time for such things."

"I know what is good when I see it, and I see it now. That's a Kneller, I'll swear, that lady in the blue silk over yonder, and the stout gentleman with the wig ought to be a Reynolds. They are all family portraits, I presume?"

"Every one."

"Do you know the names?"

"Barrymore has been coaching me in them, and I think I can say my lessons fairly well."

"Who is the gentleman with the telescope?"

"That is Rear-Admiral Baskerville, who served under Rodney in the West Indies. The man with the blue coat and the roll of paper is the first Basil Baskerville, who was Chairman of Committees of the House of Commons under Pitt."

"And this Cavalier opposite to me—the one with the black velvet and the lace?"

"Ah, you have a right to know about him. That is the cause of all the mischief, the wicked Hugo, who started the Hound of the Baskervilles. We're not likely to forget him."

I gazed with interest and some surprise upon the portrait.

"Dear me!" said Holmes, "he seems a quiet, meek-mannered man enough, but I daresay that there was a lurking devil in his eyes. I had pictured him as a more robust and ruffianly person."

"There's no doubt about the authenticity, for the name and the date, 1647, are on the back of the canvas."

Holmes said little more, but the picture of the old roysterer seemed to have a fascination for him, and his eyes were continually fixed upon it during the remainder of dinner. It was not until later, when Sir Henry had gone to his room, that I was able to follow the trend of his thoughts. He led me back into the banqueting hall, his bedroom candle in his hand, and he held it up against the time-stained portrait on the wall.

"Do you see anything there?"

I looked at the broad planed hat, the curling love-lock, the white lace collar, and the straight, severe face which was framed between them. It was a strong, resolute countenance, but it was prim, hard, and stern, with a firm-set lipped mouth, and a coldly intolerant eye.

"Is it like anyone you know?"

"There is something of Sir Henry about the jaw."

"Just a suggestion, perhaps. But wait an instant!" He stood upon a chair, and holding up the light in his left hand he curved it round so that the broad hat and round the long ringlets.

"Good heavens!" I cried, in amazement.

The face of Stapleton had sprung out of the canvas.

"Ha, you see it now. My eyes have been trained to examine faces and not merely to take them in. It is the first quality of a criminal investigator that he should see through a disguise."

"But this is marvellous. It might be his portrait."

"Yes, it is an interesting instance of a three-fold resemblance, both physical and spiritual. A study of family portraits is enough to convert a man to the doctrine of reincarnation. The fellow is a Baskerville—that is evident."

"With designs upon the succession."

"Exactly. This chance of the picture has supplied us with one of our most obvious missing links. We have him, Watson, have him, and I dare swear that before to-morrow night he will be duttering in our net as helpless as one of his own butterflies. A pin, a cork, and a card, and we add him to the Baker Street museum." He chuckled into one of his rare fits of laughter as he turned away from the picture. I have not heard him laugh often, and it has always boded ill to somebody.

I was up betimes in the morning, but Holmes was afoot earlier still, for I saw him as I dressed coming up the drive.

"Yes, we should have a full day today," he cried, cheerily. "I have just been speaking to Perkins, who has charge of the stables here, and Perkins and I are now the only living people who are stirring in the household. Ah, there is Barrymore at the window right enough. Hi, there, Barrymore!"

The face which looked out was drawn and haggard, but the sullenness had passed from it, and it assumed an obsequious air as the butler answered the hail.

"Shave enough, sir? Dear me, I overslept myself, but I am always an early riser. I see that the boots has not been cleaned. Master Henry's new brown boots will look queer if they are not cleaned before breakfast time."

"Never mind the boots."

"I will take them at once, sir."

"Has the constable been here?"

"Inspector Frankland, from Lafter, passed an hour ago. He has found the other boot—the one that master lost in the bog."

"Ah, then we shall be able to put all our difficulties behind us. Well, we cannot wait breakfast, Barrymore, for we have a long day before us."

Our conversation was hampered by the presence of the driver of the hired wagonette, so that we were forced to talk of trivial matters when our every nerve was tense with emotion and anticipation. It was a relief to me, after that unnatural restraint, when we at last passed Frankland's house and knew that we were drawing near to the Hall and to the scene of action. We did not drive up to the door, but got down near the gate of the avenue. The wagonette was paid off and ordered to return to Coombe Tracey forthwith, while we started to walk to Merripit House.

"Are you armed, Lestrade?"

The little detective smiled.

"As long as I have my trousers I have a hip-pocket, and as long as I have my hip-pocket I have something in it."

"Good! My friend and I are also ready for emergencies."

"You're mighty close about this affair, Mr. Holmes. What's the game now?"

"A waiting game."

"My word, it does not seem a very cheerful place," said the detective, with a shiver, glancing round him at the desolate slopes of the hill and at the huge lake of fog which lay over the Grimpen Mire. "I see the lights of a house ahead of us."

"That is Merripit House and the end of our journey. I must request you to walk on tiptoe and not to talk above a whisper."

We moved cautiously along the track as if we were bound for the house, but Holmes left it when we were about two hundred yards from it.

"This will do," said he. "These rocks upon the right make an admirable screen."

"We are to wait here?"

"Yes, we shall make our little ambush here. Get into this hollow. Lestrade, you have been inside the house, you know the ground. Watson! Can you tell the position of the rooms? Which are those latticed windows at this end?"

"I think they are the kitchen windows."

"And the one beyond, which shines so brightly?"

"That is certainly the dining-room."

"The blinds are up. You are sure of the land best. Creep forward quietly and see what they are doing—but for heaven's sake don't let them know that they are watched!"

I tiptoed down the path and stopped behind the low wall which surrounded the stunted orchard. Creeping in its shadow I reached a point whence I could look straight through the uncurtained window.

There were only two men in the house, Sir Henry and Stapleton. They sat with their profiles towards me on either side of the round table. Both of them were smoking cigars, and coffee and wine were in front of them. Stapleton was talking with animation, but the baronet looked pale and distrait. Perhaps the thought of that lonely walk across the ill-omened moor was weighing heavily upon his mind.

As I watched them Stapleton rose and left the room, while Sir Henry filled his glass again and leaned back in his chair, lighting at his cigar. I heard the creak of a door and crisp sound of footsteps on gravel. The steps passed along the path on the other side of the wall under which I crouched. Looking over, I saw the naturalist pause at the door of an out-house in the corner of the garden. A key turned in the lock, and as he passed in there was a curious scuffling and stamping sound from within. It was only a minute or so inside, and then I heard the key turn once more as he passed on down the path and into the house. I saw him rejoin his guest, and I crept quietly back to where my companions were waiting to tell them what I had seen.

"You say Watson, that the lady is not there?" Holmes asked, when I had finished my report.

"No."

"Where can she be then, since there is no light in any other room except the kitchen?"

"I cannot think where she is."

I have said that over the great Grimpen Mire there hung a dense, white fog, which lay like a huge, well-defined cloud, upon the landscape. Its edge lay against the sky in a long, straight line, and it was drifting slowly towards us. The moon shone on it, and it looked like a great shimmering cliff, intensely white and seemingly motionless. Holmes had turned towards it, and he muttered impatiently as he watched its sluggish drift.

"Two hours, and it reaches us, Watson."

"Is that serious?"

"Very serious, indeed—the one thing upon earth which could stop our little game. We can't be sure at present that we can't be very long, now. It is already ten o'clock. Our success, and even his life, may depend upon his coming out before the fog is over the path."

The night was clear and fine above us. The stars shone cold and bright, while a half moon bathed the whole scene in a soft, uncertain light. Before us lay the dark bulk of the house, its serrated roof and bristling chimneys hard outlined against the silver-spangled sky. Broad bars of golden light from the lower windows stretched across the orchard and the moor. One of these was suddenly shut off. The servants had left the kitchen. There only remained the lamp in the dining-room where the two men, the murderous host and the unconscious guest, still chatted over their cigars.

Every minute that white woolly mass flowed closer and closer to the moor was drifting closer and closer to the house. Already the first thin wisps of it were curling across the golden square of the lighted window. The farther edge of the orchard was already invisible, and the trees were standing out of a swirl of white vapour. As we watched it the fog-bank met the house, and rolling round both corners of the house and rolled slowly into one dense bank, on which the upper floor and the roof floated like a strange ship upon a shadowy sea. The mist-bank struck his window, and for a minute or two he looked impassionately upon the rock in front of us, and stamped his feet in his impatience.

"If he isn't out in a quarter of an hour the fog will be covered in half an hour we won't be able to see our hands in front of us."

"Shall we move farther back upon higher ground?"

"Yes, I think it would be as well."

So as the fog-bank flowed onwards we fell back upon the hillside until we were half a mile from the house, and still that dense, white sea, with the moon reflecting its upper surface, lapped up and inexorably on.

"We are far enough so far," said Holmes. "We dare not take the chances of his being overtaken before he can reach us. At all costs we must prevent him from crossing where we are." He dropped on his knees and clapped his ear to the ground. "Thank God, I think he is coming! I hear him coming."

A sound of quick steps broke the silence of the moor. Crouching among the stones we stared intently at the silver-tipped bank in front of us. The steps grew louder, and through the fog, like figures cut out of gray cardboard, the man whom we were awaiting. He looked round him in surprise as he emerged into the clear, starlit night. Then he came swiftly along the path, never halting for an instant, until he went on up the long slope behind us. As he walked he glanced continually over either shoulder, like a man who is ill at ease.

"Hist!" cried Holmes, and I heard the sharp click of a cocking pistol. "Look out! It's coming!"

There was a thin, crisp, continuous patter from somewhere in the heart of that rewolling bank. The cloud was within fifty yards of where we lay, and we glared at it, all three, uncertain what horror it was which was coming out of the heart of it. I was at Holmes's elbow, and I felt my face contract as my face. It was pale and exultant, his eyes shining brightly in the moonlight. But suddenly he gave an inarticulate cry, a rigid, fixed stare, and his lips parted in amazement. And then, in an instant, Lestrade gave a yell of terror and threw himself face downwards upon the ground. I sprang to my feet, my incoherent hand grasping my pistol, my mind paralyzed by the dreadful shape which had sprung out upon us from the shadows of the fog. A hound it was, an enormous coal-black hound, but not such a hound as mortal eyes have ever seen. Fire burst from its open mouth, its eyes glowed with a smouldering glare, its muzzle and throat and dewlap were all outlined in flickering flame. Never in the delirious dream of a disordered brain could anything more savage, more appallingly more hellish be conceived than that dark form which bounded through the mist and broke upon us out of the wall of fog. Those long bounds were the most terrible feature of all, for no ordinary creature could possibly have covered such a following hard upon the footsteps of our friend. As I stared I saw my own terror reflected in the eyes of my companions, but the fascination of the apparition that we allowed him to pass before we had recovered our nerves. Five burst from its fire upon the hound. Two bullets struck it, but not such a hound as mortal eyes have ever seen. Fire burst from its open mouth, its eyes glowed with a smouldering glare, its muzzle and throat and dewlap were all outlined in flickering flame. Never in the delirious dream of a disordered brain could anything more savage, more appallingly more hellish be conceived than that dark form which bounded through the mist and broke upon us out of the wall of fog. Those long bounds were the most terrible feature of all, for no ordinary creature could possibly have covered such a following hard upon the footsteps of our friend. As I stared I saw my own terror reflected in the eyes of my companions, but the fascination of the apparition that we allowed him to pass before we had recovered our nerves. Five bullets in rapid succession fired into the back of the monstrous creature as it dashed past the first victim which it had pursued. With howl after howl of agony and a vicious snap in the air, it rolled upon its back, four feet pawing furiously, and then fell limp upon its side. I stooped, panting, and reviewed my pistol to the dreadful, shimmering head, but it was useless to press the trigger. For this earth it was dead.

Sir Henry lay insensible where he had fallen. We tore away his collar, and Holmes breathed a prayer of gratitude when he saw that there was no sign of a wound and that the rescue had been in time. Slowly our friend's eyelids shivered and he made a feeble effort to move. Lestrade thrust his brandy-flask between the poor fellow's teeth, and two frightened eyes were looking up at us.

"My God!" he whispered. "What was it? What, in Heaven's name, was it?"

"It's dead, whatever it is," said Holmes. "We've laid the family ghost once and for ever."

In mere size and strength it was a terrible creature which was lying stretched before us. It was not a hound, though it was of a breed that is part hound, part deerhound, but it appeared to be a combination of the two—gaunt, savage, and as large as a small lioness. Even now, in the stillness of death, the huge jaws seemed to be dripping with a bluish flame and the small deep-set, cruel eyes were ringed with fire. I placed my hand upon the glowing muzzle, and as I held them up my fingers smouldered and gleamed in the darkness.

"Phosphorus," I said.

"A cunning preparation of it," said Holmes, sniffing at the dead animal. "There is no smell which might have interfered with his power of scent. We owe you a deep debt, Sir Henry, for having exposed you to this fright. I was prepared for no less terrible an ordeal when I asked you to do what you have done. I am sorry that you were exposed to it."

"Having first endangered it. Are you strong enough to stand?"

"Give me another mouthful of that brandy and I shall be ready for anything. So! Now, if you will help me up, What do you propose to do?"

"To leave you here. You are not fit for further adventures to-night. If you will wait, one or other of us will go back with you to the Hall."

He tried to stagger to his feet; but he was still ghastly pale and trembling in every limb. We helped him to a rock, where he sat shivering with his face buried in his hands.

"We must leave you now," said Holmes. "The rest of our work must be done, and every minute is of importance. We have our case, and now we only want our man.

"It's a thousand to one against our finding him at the house," he continued, as we hurried our steps swiftly down the path. "Those shots must have told him that the game was up."

"We were some distance off, and this fog may have deadened them."

"He knew the time to expect us, and he knew the danger that he ran. Depend upon it, he has gone."

"He still has time to get well in front of us. But we have the hound on our side, and I don't see how he can escape us. Surely a light is breaking through the fog?"

"Yes, it is the dawn."

"Dawn it is, sure enough, and there is the house clear enough. Look out for the hound. I'll go round to the back door in case he should break away that road. Surround the house, and if he makes a break shoot him down."

I ran round with my pistol, but there was no sign of the fugitive. The first rays of the sun were beginning to fall upon the old building, which stood out gray and silent in front of us. One window in the corner was shattered. Holmes broke in the door with the butt of his gun, and we passed from room to room, finding everything exactly as it had been when we visited it in the morning. Then we ascended the creaking oak staircase which led to the bedrooms.

Holmes was the first to enter the chamber of the tragedy. The four-poster bed had been slept in, and the man had lain down without undressing. He had apparently been reading when he fell asleep, for a lamp was burning on the table, and a book lay upon the floor. Holmes picked it up and handed it to me with a questioning glance as to what I made of it. It was a work upon criminal law, and the page to which it was opened contained a report of the proceedings at the inquest upon Hugo Baskerville. I saw that a passage had been marked in pencil, and that Stapleton had evidently been reading it before he fell asleep.

Holmes sat down in the chair and examined the other articles upon the table. Finally he turned his attention to the man himself.

"He has been dressed for a journey. Here are his clothes, his watch, his money, his papers. He has evidently been prepared to start. But what has become of his luggage?"

"He had two large trunks. They are in the house now."

"Then he has not packed his trunks. Where is the key to his bedroom door?"

"He has left it in the lock."

"Very good. I suppose that we may look upon it as certain that he has not gone away in any ordinary fashion. Why should he run away, since he has hoodwinked us all and secured exactly what he wanted? Why should he run away, since he has got rid of the only witness against him? He has every reason to suppose that his victim has been killed by the hound. Why should he run away, I say? He has already run away from a considerable property. He will not do so without strong reason. But he will assuredly run away if he finds that his secret is known and that his game is up. He had reason to fear an arrest as soon as the body was found. Why has he not fled, then? Because he had some other motive which would induce him to remain. Now, if that motive were not removed by his leaving this room, I am very much deceived. Ah, I thought so!"

As he spoke he had picked up a hunting-crop which lay upon the bed, and he turned the handle towards us. There was a stain of blood upon the knob.

"This is most serious," said Holmes. "There has been some foul play. I fear that the conclusion is inevitable."

"He could not have escaped from the moor. We should have seen him."

"There is only one way in which he could have escaped. He may have gone back along the path by which he came. Let us follow it."

It was easy to trace our fugitive's movements, for he had left a clear impression upon the soft, moist soil. We saw him pass the house and walk rapidly for a hundred yards along the track by which we had driven in the morning. Then he had struck off into the moor. Holmes ran forward, and we followed in his footsteps with our hearts in our mouths, for we knew that we were now drawing near the end. Holmes's face was very grim and stern as he ran, and I understood that he had given up all hope of saving the life of the man whom we had come down to protect.

We had run a full mile before we found him. He had evidently given the matter much thought before he had decided upon his course of action, for he had adopted the one which was best calculated to insure his death. Running in a straight line he had reached a point where the path divided into three. There he had begun to circle, and had run round and round in a great ring, which had brought him back to the path exactly a mile from the house. Here he had fallen, flat upon his face, with his arms extended. He had not died in the direction of the house, so that he had presumably run all the way back after he had given up all hope of escape. Only a single set of footmarks led away from the prostrate figure. Holmes stood over it in silence for a minute, and then he touched the dead man upon the shoulder.

"The brute!" he said, at last. "Come, Watson, we have no time to lose. Let us see if we can do anything."

The man was clearly past all human help. His back was broken and his head forced round so that he looked backwards. There was no wound upon his body, though his terror-stricken face showed that he had been pursued by a horror as frightful as that which had run upon his throat. Save for the tracks which we had made there was no sign of any other presence upon the moor. Not a bush nor a tree broke the desolate monotony. Nothing stirred save a few wheeling sheep upon the distant hillsides. There could be no doubt that the pursuing hound had been summoned into existence by the dead man's diabolical power, and that it had been laid off the scent and stopped from doing its fell work by the operation of some outside agency. Holmes had suggested pistol shots fired over the hound's head, but I knew that he had shot it dead. Some spectral illusion had dominated the unfortunate victim's mind and had driven him to his death. Neither of the two could be arrested for it. But Holmes was terribly cut up over the tragedy, for it had been largely due to his arrangements that the man had been exposed to it.

"I am not sorry for Stapleton," he said, as we walked back. "He has shown himself to be a very dangerous man. I have seldom known a more dangerous one. But I cannot disguise from myself that the responsibility for his death lies heavily upon me."

"I should have thought that you had cleared it entirely."

"I cannot consent to anything which may look like shirking my responsibility in the matter. I am glad that Sir Henry is engaged to-day, for he will be needed by the time that we get back. We must break the news to Barrymore and his wife. To him it may be a relief, but she will feel it keenly, poor woman, and there is no prospect that either of them will get a new master to their liking. Then there is the question as to what we shall say at the inquest."

"We can tell the truth."

"Part of the truth, perhaps—enough to show that Stapleton had no hand in bringing Sir Henry here. But if we tell all we shall have to explain why we withheld information at first, and I foresee that it will be difficult for us to do so. Our best course will be to hold our tongues and let the matter fall as an accident. Fortunately, I am personally well known to Frankland, and I have no doubt that he will make things as easy for us as he can. Then we have our report to present to Sir Henry, and we have to explain the death of Stapleton, for the whole countryside will be searching for him. Finally, we have to make certain of the hound, for we cannot leave Sir Henry in peace until we are assured that the creature is dead. I shall be very much surprised if it is not lying in the bushes at the very place where we lost sight of it. Altogether we have our hands pretty full, and it will be a strange thing if we cannot find some way out of our difficulties."

We had come to the end of our adventure, however, so far as the unfortunate Stapleton was concerned. We found the hound lying near the path, and it was clear that the beast had been dead before it had ever overtaken its master. Holmes's conjecture that the creature had been laid off the scent and pulled down by supernatural terrors seemed to be borne out by the relief which was visible in the faces of the whole household when they learned that it was impossible that it could have been called into actual existence. Holmes and I carried the dead body down and laid it in the out-house in the corner of the garden, that the sight of it might not give a fresh shock to the servants when they returned to their duties. Lestrade remained behind to search the house and make sure."

Uncle Sam's Great Seal.

The great seal of the United States was adopted June 20, 1782. Immediately after the adoption of the Declaration of Independence, on July 4, 1776, a committee was appointed to prepare a device for a seal, but the matter was not consummated until 1782. The committee, before the device is, on one side, a spread eagle, with a shield having thirteen stripes, palways and a chief azure, in one talon a bundle of arrows, in the other an olive branch, in its beak a scroll with the motto "E Pluribus Unum" and over its head a glory breaking from the clouds surrounding thirteen stars. On the reverse is an unfinished pyramid, signifying the growth and strength of the states, over it the all seeing eye in a triangle surrounded by a glory, and over the whole the words, "Annuit Coeptis" (God has favored our undertaking) and "Novus Ordo Seculorum (a new order of things). Between these inscriptions is the date MDCCLXXVI. would be.

Redeeming Waste Places.

In all the large and essentially towns too much stress cannot be laid upon the importance of redeeming the waste places. The cities and towns that have most marvelously transformed themselves are those that have not allowed an open space to remain unutilized by the apostles of beauty. When it comes to the great park systems, the municipality, as a rule, does its full duty; sometimes, it is true, making many errors in judgment, but generally proving indefatigable in the matter of keeping at the thing. The smaller spaces, however, the thought of such little importance that they are more frequently than not overlooked by the great powers that be, and private citizens take up the matter it remains undone.

The Price of Disobedience.

An Italian prince had strictly forbidden one of his pages to smoke, but so great a hold had the habit contracted over her that she secretly engaged in the practice at every opportunity. One day she was indulging in a cigarette as she reclined on a balcony attired in a dress of the lightest muslin. Suddenly her father appeared on the scene, and in the hurry to hide the evidence of her disobedience she threw the cigarette in hand with the burning cigarette behind her back. The result was startling and tragic. Her dress was immediately in a blaze, and she was fatally burned from head to foot, dying after suffering intensely.

Enjoy Using Herpicide on Account of Its Disinfectness.

The ladies who have used Newbro's Herpicide speak of it in the highest terms, for its quick effect in cleaning the scalp of dandruff and also for its sedative as a general hair-dressing. It makes the scalp feel fresh and it allays that itching which dandruff will cause. Newbro's Herpicide effectively cures dandruff, as it destroys the germ that causes it. The same germ causes hair to fall out and later baldness; in killing it, Herpicide stops falling hair and prevents baldness. It is also a most delightful dressing for it lends an aristocratic charm to the hair that is quite distinctive. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c. in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich.

Unsolicited Testimony.

Here is the unsolicited testimony of Mrs. C.A. Martin, of Granville, N.Y., concerning Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women. We have her consent to publish her letter. It reads as follows:

I feel that I should tell you what wonders Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets have done for me. I had been running down, getting thin in flesh, and losing appetite for the past year, and though doctor's advice was sought and different remedies were used, there seemed to be no improvement. At length a friend who had received great benefit from Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets, advised me to try this remedy. I did so. In less than a week I began to see good effects. My appetite returned, my nerves began to get steady, my aches and pains began to leave me, I commenced to take on flesh, and I felt that I was being rapidly restored to health. At this moment I feel I am a new woman.

We want you to notice that the above letter proves our claims for Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets in two particulars.

First, that they will restore health after other remedies and even physicians have failed. Mrs. Martin had tried both.

Second, that improvement begins at once. Mrs. Martin says she felt effects within a week.

If you are suffering from a run-down condition, or any weakness peculiar to your sex, you, too, can be made well and strong by these tablets.

Take them one week and note the improvement in your feelings and general health.

What a Farmer's Wife Owes to Bileans.

Mrs. John Whitfield, Swan Lake, Man., writes:—"I can conscientiously describe how bad I felt before I used Bilean. I could not eat for what it caused pain. There was a sensation of tightness in the side and my liver was entirely out of order. I could get no sleep at nights, suffered a pain from kidney trouble, and was, altogether, in a nervous condition. I had been ailing in this way for years and it is gratifying to find that Bilean's cures were equal to my case. It is a certain cure for headache, indigestion, spring blood troubles, constipation, biliousness, sick headache, and all liver and stomach disorders. 50 cents a box, from all druggists and stores, or Bilean Co., Toronto.

Weak Kidneys, surely point to weak Kidney Nerves. The Kidneys, like the Heart, and the Stomach, feel their weakness, not in the organ itself, but in the nerves that control and guide and strengthen it. Dr. Shoop's Restorative is a medicine specifically prepared to reach these controlling nerves. To doctor the Kidneys alone, a futile, it is a waste of time, and of money as well.

THE HOUND OF THE BASKERVILLES

BY A. CONAN DOYLE.

Author of "The Green Flag" and "The Great Boer War."

The front door was open, so we rushed in and hurried from room to room, to the amazement of a doddering old manservant, who met us in the passage. There was no light save in the dining-room, but Holmes caught up a lamp and left no corner of the house unexplored. In the study we could see of the man whom we were chasing. On the upper floor, however, one of bedroom doors was locked.

"There's someone in here," cried Lestrade. "I can hear a movement. Open this door!"

A faint moaning and rustling came from within. Holmes struck the door just over the lock with the sole of his foot and it flew open. Pistol in hand, we all three rushed into the room.

But there was no sign within it of that desperate and defiant villain whom we expected to see. In the centre of this room there was an upright chair, which had been placed at some period as a support to the iron safe let sunk into the beam which supported the roof. To this post a figure was tied, so swathed and muffled in the sheets which had been used to secure it that one could not for the moment tell whether it was that of a man or a woman. One towel passed round the throat and was secured at the back of the pillar. Another covered the lower part of the face, and over it two dark eyes—eyes full of grief and shame and shameful questioning—stared back at us. In a minute we had torn off the rag, unwrathed the bonds, and Mrs. Stapleton sank upon the floor in front of us. As her beautiful head fell upon her chest I saw the clear red weal of a whiplash across her neck.

"The brute!" cried Holmes. "Here, Lestrade, your brandy-bottle! Put her in the chair! She had fainted from illtreage and exhaustion."

She opened her eyes again.

"Is he safe?" she asked. "Has he escaped?"

"He cannot escape us, madam."

"No, no, I did not mean my husband. Sir Henry? Is he safe?"

"Yes."

"And the hound?"

"It is dead."

She gave a long sigh of satisfaction.

"Thank God! Thank God! Oh, this villain! See how he has treated me!" She shot her arms out from her sleeves, and we saw with horror that they were all mottled with bruises. "But this is nothing—nothing! It is my mind and soul that he has tortured and defiled. I could endure it all, ill-usage, solitude, a life of deception, everything, as long as I could still cherish the hope that I had his love, but now I know that to this also I have been his dupe and his tool." She broke into passionate sobbing as she spoke.

"You bear him no good will, madam," said Holmes. "Tell us then where we shall find him. For you have evidently decided him in evil, help us now and so atone."

"There is but one place where he can have fled," she answered. "There is an old tin mine on an island in the heart of the Mire. It was there that he kept his hound and there also he had made preparations so that he might have a refuge. That is where he would fly."

The fog-bank lay like white wool against the window. Holmes held the lamp towards it.

"See," said he. "No one could find his way into the Grimpen Mire tonight."

She laughed and clapped her hands. Her eyes and face were gleamed with fierce merriment.

"He may find his way in, but never out," she cried. "How can he see the guiding wands to-night? We planted them together, he and I, to mark the pathway through the mire. Oh, if I could only have placed a few more out to-day. Then indeed you would have had him at your mercy!"

It was evident to us that all pursuit was in vain until the fog had lifted. Meanwhile we left Lestrade in possession of the house while Holmes and I went back with the baronet to Baskerville Hall. The story of the Stapletons could no longer be withheld from him, but he took the blow better than we had learned the truth about the woman whom he had loved. But the shock of the night's adventure had broken down his nerves, and before morning he lay delirious in a high fever, under the care of Dr. Mortimer. The two of them were destined to travel together round the world before Sir Henry had become once more the hale, hearty man that he had been before he became master of that ill-omened estate.

And now I come rapidly to the conclusion of this singular narrative, in which I have tried to make the reader share those dark fears and those wild surmises which clouded our lives so long, and ended in so tragic a manner. On the morning after the death of the hound the fog had lifted and we were guided by Mrs. Stapleton to the point where they had found a pathway through the bog. It helped us to realize the horror of poor Stapleton's life when we saw the eagerness and joy with which she laid out on firmer ground the track. We left her standing upon the thin peninsula of firm, peaty soil which tapered out into the melancholy bog. From the god of it a small wand planted here and there showed where the path zig-zagged from tuft to tuft of rushes among those green-scummed pits and foul quagmires which barred the way to the stranger. Rank reeds and lush, slimy water-plants sent out odor of decay and a heavy miasmatic vapor into our faces, while a false step plunged us more than once knee-deep into the dark, quivering mire, which oozed for yards in soft undulations around our feet. Its tenacious grip plucked at our heels as we walked, and when we sank into it it was with a sense malignant hand was tugging us down into those obscene depths. Grim and purposeful was the clutch in which it held us. Once only we saw a trace that someone had passed that perilous path before us. From amid a tuft of cotton-grass which bore it up out of the surrounding slime was projecting. Holmes sank to his waist as he stepped from the path to entice it, and had we not been there to drag him out he would never have set foot upon the first island again. To hold an old black boot in the air. "Meyers, Toronto," was printed on the leather inside.

"It is worth a mud bath," said he. "It is one friend Sir Henry's missing boot."

"Thrown there by Stapleton in his flight."

"Exactly. He retained it in his hand after using it to set the hound upon the track. He had dropped it when the game was up, still clutching it. And he carried it away at the point of his flight. We know at least that he came thus far in safety."

But more than that we were never destined to know, though there was much which we might guess. There was no chance of finding footsteps in the mire, for the rising fog was blowing swiftly in upon them, but as we advanced it grew thicker and thicker around us. Always there lurked before us the possibility that desperate and defiant villain whom we expected to see. In a hand to hand fight our knowledge of the country would give us an enormous advantage, and the thought of it was ever present to our minds. But suddenly, as we approached the end of the island, the mist cleared for a moment, and there was our enemy before us. There, deep in the treacherous mire, a black, horrible quagmire, lay stretched a huge creature, dead as it had never been in life. Out of the heart of the great Grimpen Mire, down in the foul slime of the bogs monsters which had stalked him in his cold and cruel-hearted mood in life.

Many traces we found of him in the bogs of that island where he had led his savage ally. A bogs driving-wheel and a shaft fashioned with rubbish showed the position of an abandoned mine. On side it were the crumbling remains of the cottage of the miners, driven away no doubt by the foul reek of the surrounding swamp. In one of these a staple and chain with a quantity of gnawed bones showed where the animal had been confined. A skeleton with a tangle of brown hair adhering to it lay among the debris.

"A dog!" said Holmes. "By Jove, a curly-haired spaniel. Poor Mortimer will never see his pet again. Well, I do not think that this place contains any secret which we have not already fathomed. He could hide his hound, but he could not hush his voice, and every night it went forth and was always a risk, and it was only on the supreme day, which he regarded as the end of all his efforts, that he dared do it. This paste in the tin is no doubt the luminous mixture with which the creature was daubed. It was suggested, of course, by the story of the family bellhound, and by the desire to frighten old Sir Charles to death. No wonder the poor devil of a convict ran and screamed, even as our friend did, and as we ourselves might have done, when we saw such a creature bounding through the darkness of the moor upon his track. It was a cunning device, for, apart from the chance of driving your victim to his death, what peasant would venture to inquire too closely into such a creature should he get sight of it, as many have done, no doubt, on the moor? I said it in London, Watson, and I say it again now, that never yet have we helped to hunt down a more dangerous man than he who is lying yonder"—he swept his long arm towards the huge mottled expanse of green-splotched bog which stretched away until it merged into the russet slopes of the moor.

CHAPTER XV.

It was the end of November, and Holmes and I sat, upon a raw and foggy night, on either side of a blazing fire in our sitting-room in Baker Street. Since the tragic incident of our visit to Devonshire he had been engaged in two affairs of the most private importance, in the first of which he had rendered such a service to the head of one of the reigning houses of Europe that a special letter of thanks, handed over to him personally by the King's own hand, assured him of the gratitude of himself and his family for all time. The second was the case of Mr. Henry Wood, the solicitor, who proved to be a fellow-criminal of the notorious Woodley, and was sentenced to fourteen years' penal servitude. Since the conclusion of this business he had been working out a long chain of research into the literature of criminology, which he had recently been made the text of a learned treatise from his pen. I had observed that for two days he had been turning over sheets of typewriting which lay upon his knee, and finally he had sprung from his chair with a cry of triumph and had sat down to the table to correct them.

"You have just come in the nick of time, Watson," said he. "How would you like to assist in a piece of work which promises to be exceptionally interesting and original?"

The next instant Holmes had emptied five barrels of his revolver into the brute.

"I'm all attention, my dear fellow," said I, with unfeigned admiration. "Your words have given me an object in life."

He picked up a bundle of papers from the floor and settled himself down in his chair.

"You have, no doubt, heard little of Cartwright, the boy whom I took on as an assistant when pursuing the investigation which ended in the unmasking of Henry Wood. This lad applied to me when in great need of employment, and I was glad to be able to show my appreciation of the way he had conducted himself during the case by standing his friend. I therefore engaged him at a pound a week, and found him useful in many ways. He is a bright youth, with plenty of energy and resource, and I have hopes that he will prove a valuable member of society. Recently he has been out of employment, and I have been exerting myself to get him something to do. You can imagine, therefore, that I have plenty of calls upon my purse."

"Why, you are a public benefactor," said I.

"Well, you know my methods with regard to my agents. I like to give them a thorough training before they act independently. Their first efforts have been directed to finding out what has become of the various members of the criminal fraternity who are now doing time. Each has had his particular line of inquiry, and as they have all been recommended to me by people whom I have obliged, I have come to learn a good deal of what is going on in the underworld. Cartwright has been worrying me for some days to allow him to call upon a certain Shlessinger, who is known to me as the agent of a clique of international thieves, but I have refused, as I have no wish that my people should be brought into contact with such a fellow. Shlessinger has been drinking heavily of late, and Cartwright has been anxious to take advantage of his weakness. Now, however, he has learned that Shlessinger has gone down to Bristol, and he has accordingly followed him there, in the hope that he may pick up some information. I have no doubt that he will be back to-night, and he may have something to report which will be of interest to us."

It was late in the evening before our assistant returned. His appearance showed that he had been carrying out his instructions to the letter, but he had gained little for his pains.

"I've had a dirty night of it," said he, as he sank into a chair. "I've been dodging about the docks in a drizzle of rain, and I'm as wet as a fish. I've had a good deal to drink, too, and I'm not used to it. Altogether I've had enough to last me for a month. But I've got my man."

"Shlessinger?" asked Holmes.

"Yes, he's down in the cabin of the Arizona, which sails for Quebec at daybreak. I've had my eye on him all the time, for I knew that he would be off as soon as he got his money. I've been on board the Arizona and I've had a look at the cabin where he is. He's got a big trunk with him, and I'll be surprised if there's not a good deal of silver in it."

"Excellent!" said Holmes. "Anything else?"

"He's got a new overcoat, and he's changed his boots."

"Anything else?"

"He's got a black eye and a broken nose, and he's a very sick man."

"Nothing more?"

"Nothing that I can remember."

"Oh, but you must remember more than that! Let us have it!"

"Well, I've told you all I know."

"Then I must refresh your memory. Shlessinger has been drinking heavily, has he not? He has been celebrating his release from prison. He has been drinking with a friend. That friend is you."

"Me!"

"Yes, you. You have been with him all the time. You have been with him in his cabin on board the Arizona. You have been with him in his berth. You have been with him in his trunk. You have been with him in his overcoat. You have been with him in his boots. You have been with him in his black eye. You have been with him in his broken nose. You have been with him in his sickness. You have been with him in his drink. You have been with him in his—"

"Oh, stop, stop!" cried Cartwright, laughing.

"Well, I think that will be sufficient," said Holmes, smiling. "Now, Cartwright, I'll trouble you to take off your boots and to hand over that overcoat."

The lad sat down in the chair and began to unlace his boots.

"Why, you are a public benefactor," said I.

Laxative Bromo Quinine Cures in One Day.

Breathe Hyomei and Get Quick Relief Cures all Bronchial Troubles.

As a usual thing a remedy that has immediate action combining powerful drugs that should be used sparingly, is one of the reasons why so many ordinary tablets that are sold for Catarrh, Colds and Coughs should not be taken by people with a weak heart, as they contain dangerous heart depressing effects.

When Hyomei, however, is breathed quickly it is absorbed into the blood in this way. Its healing medication goes right to the spot where the disease germs are present, at once soothing and heal the raw, inflamed mucous membranes. The action in this way is similar to a fire in your fireplace, warming the entire room.

No other medicine for the cure of Catarrh, Colds and Bronchial troubles is so reliable as Hyomei. Breathing through the pocket inhaler which goes with every outfit, it can be used at any time, anywhere, without thus getting full medication of the healing vapor before the disease germs are checked. It gives almost instant relief to all affections of the throat, chest, lungs, and is guaranteed to break up a cold in ten hours.

A complete Hyomei outfit, consisting of a bottle of Hyomei, pocket inhaler, can be carried in the vest pocket or in the hand bag, druggist's charge for one dollar, with a guarantee that if it fails to relieve Catarrh, Colds or Bronchitis your money will be refunded.

Extra bottles of Hyomei be needed they can be obtained for only 50 cents, making the cost of a complete treatment only $1.50. Druggists should be able to supply Hyomei. If your druggist is out of it, send one dollar to The Hyomei Company, Buffalo, N.Y.

WHEN YOU ARE INTRODUCED.

"When she is being presented to you shake a lady should not, she keeps her seat when a young man or a man is presented to her. A bow is necessary, however, always courteous and effective when bowing to her guests. Upon receiving an introduction, it is not necessary to say anything at all, such as 'how do you do,' pleased to meet you,' etc. It sounds very stale and how her acknowledgment, unless she wishes to show some unfriendliness, when she extends her hand. Men usually shake hands with each other. It is a mistake to contract a lady or gentleman to shake hands with a man as presented to them. A bow is sufficient. If there be a group of people, the hostess should introduce the latest arrival to each one present. Mrs. Brown, allow me to present Miss White and Doctor Green." Men should always rise when a lady is introduced to them, in her own home, a hostess may introduce a man to a lady without asking her consent, but it is always well to request permission before introducing a man to a lady. Introductions unfortunate are rare, if the following instructions are observed. As the introduction is being performed, each person presented, much care should be taken to pronounce distinctly the name of the person to whom they are being introduced. Many a friendship has been spoiled by a careless mumbling of names. Always remember to say Mrs. Brown, not Mrs. Brown, and Miss Jones, not Miss Jones. Woman's privilege.

THREE HUNDRED

Clothes Brushes to be Distributed

Thursday, April 11th, 10 cts. Each.

We had made to our order in Germany 300 clothes brushes of the same quality (and from the same maker) that we bought about ten years ago. They are an excellent brush to sell at 25c. On the above date we will distribute them at a nominal price of 10 Cents Each.

We know they are good and as a further guarantee have had our name stamped on the back of each brush. To give you an idea of how they wear. There are brushes of first lot that have been in general use ever since, and look good as new to-day. Any time Thursday after 9 o'clock. We prefer to sell only one to a home.

All Carpets and Linoleums Worth From 110 to 120 Cents on the $.

Every maker of Oil Cloth, Linoleum and Carpets has recently advanced the price of their goods. We anticipated the advances and bought for spring several thousand dollars worth more than usual. Our big carpet rooms are simply full of stock. We intend to dole stuff out at old prices just as long as present stocks last. If you have any idea of fixing up, by all means do it this year. We will be delighted to show you our new carpets and rugs whether you wish to buy now or not.

Women's Coats and Jackets for Spring.

What's the fashion? A hundred answers might safely be given. The latitude of choice is wide. The coats are becoming, running from tight fitting and short box styles to knee lengths or longer. Semi-fitting, box or snug fitting Jackets are in order. Etons are claiming a mention. Now is the time of times to study the fashions, because practically all of the spring arrivals are now in stock.

At $5.00 we show fawn and black coverts, short tight fitting, black and tweed box styles, and 3/4 length tweeds.

At $6.50 and $7.50, various styles in tweeds, coverts and blacks.

At $10.00—Tailored tweeds, broadcloths and coverts, made in new attractive styles.

At $7.50 and $12.00—Black Silk Etons copied from New York models. 3-4 sleeve considered very dressy.

Women's Skirts of Unusual Values.

We take pride in showing you our new tailored skirts. We represent a maker that builds skirts better than any other manufacturer that we have been able to find. That's why our better skirts make so many friends for our Ready-to-wear Department. The most critical dressmaker cannot improve on them, and best of all prices are no more than you pay for ordinary kinds. If you are a critic on skirts it will give us pleasure to show you our new spring skirts.

Dresden Brilliantine Waistings.

The very newest arrival for waists is a Brilliantine with light cream ground in artistic dresden designs. Ask to see them at the dress goods counter, 50c yard.

A Black Dress Material—Kantona

A weave of black dress goods that has turned out very satisfactory is "Kantona" cloth. It has every appearance of silk warp henrietta, and comes at 50c, 75c and $1.00 yard.

Batiste DeLisse, a New White Fabric.

Batiste DeLisse is the latest addition to the sheer white goods family. It is like a fine Persian Lawn with the lustre and finish of linen. Will no doubt be used extensively for shadow embroidery, 20c, 25c, 35c, 40c yd.

Four Yard Wide Linoleums and Double Fold Carpets.

Don't forget that we have tons of Linoleums, mostly four yards wide, that were made in Scotland. Ask to see Crossley's double fold Carpets.

Millinery.

There is such a radical change in hat styles that everyone wants new hats. Kindly send your orders in early in week as possible and avoid disappointment at week end. Orders filled in rotation.

We Can Save for You on Muslin Underwear.

Forehandedness! That one word spells all the many dollars saved for you on this immense stock of muslin underwear, and you can be sure that as long as present stock are here you will not have to pay a cent more, but when we have to re-order every item will be at least a fourth higher than to-day's prices. Some of these garments cannot be bought this season at any price. Makers have discontinued many lines that were at a special price because they cannot afford to make them at old prices.

Corset Covers, 25c to $1.25. Night Robes, 50c to $3.00. Skirts, 75c to $5.00. Drawers, 25c to $1.50. Bridal Setts, $6.50 to $12.00.

Miss Napanee

Corsets.

So much depends on getting the right corset. Don't adopt a corset fashion blindly. Have one who "knows" tell you which style you should wear. Some where in this big corset stock of ours is the corset you may choose for comfort, freedom and good form. They all interpret the fashion but in ways to suit individuality. We have people with us, trained in the corset business. They will fit you if you please. Range of corsets in stock from 35c to $7.50.

Fashionable Clothes for Men, Youths and Children.

There are certain things that one naturally goes to a certain store to get, because of the comfortable assurance that the things will be correct. On that basis we have won a very great clothing business.

COME TO ROBINSON'S if properly made clothing is wanted; stylish good fitting clothing is wanted; correct, all wool materials are desired; newest colorings and trimmings are desired; a fair price is any consideration.

Where to buy is of first importance. What to buy is answered in full from the abundant stocks of Suits, Overcoats, Trousers, etc., in up-to date styles.

Overalls and Smocks.

This store stands for the dependableness of its stock of working men's clothes. If you want a pair of Overalls or a Jumper that is thoroughly guaranteed, come to us. We have some specially good values that our buyer picked up in Sanford's Warehouse a week ago. Our guarantee covers you.

Overalls at 50c, 75c, 1.00. Smocks or Jumpers at 50c, 75c, 1.00 and 1.25. Boys' Brownie Overalls at 25c, 45c, 50c, 60c.

Shirts from London.

"Flaxman" Shirts made in London, England, just a little better made than anything that we can get in Canada, and will outwear any dollar shirt you can find.

NECKWEAR—The new correct shades and widths, and a wealth of assortment to choose from. 25c and 50c each. Specials at 10c and 2 for 25c.

SUSPENDERS—Everelastic, different, comfortable, light in weight.

Men's Hats.

Stiff Hats in some fifteen different styles and shapes, featherweight and self conforming. Some with cork lining in to protect the head from the heat.

Soft Hats in all the new shapes and shades. Best hats are the following makes, Buckley, King, Borsalins. Prices, 2.00, 2.50 and 3.00. Other makes at from 50c up.

BARGAINS—We have about eight dozen hats left over from last year, odd sizes and we want to clear them. In order to do so we have put them out with size cards and reduced price tickets on them. Half price is the rule. In some cases less than half price.

Dainty Valenciennes Laces.

There are many new and original designs out for this season and you will find many of the best of them here. Our finest Vals. of course come from France. They are stronger and have the real lace appearance that you do not get in other makes. About three hundred new designs to choose from.

The New Ribbons.

Paris has told us that sashes are to be worn with all gowns excepting the tailored suits. Especially is this noticeable in the afternoon and evening gowns. In other words, ribbons in profusion; and it is a dictum of fashion dear to a women's heart. The ribbons are here—new, beautiful and in variety. All our ribbons are sold in Millinery Section.

Jackets Materials for Spring.

Just unpacked several pieces of Jacket cloths in the new checks, wee and large. Colorings run mostly in black and white, browns and green mixtures. 58 inches wide, $2.50 per yard.

Rugs for Carriages.

These Rugs are such useful things that we often wonder there are not more used. They come in so handy for a dozen different uses in the house—a rug to throw over a couch, a rug to take in your boat for a picnic, a rug that can be used for a blanket. In fact you will find a hundred uses for them. Patterns and colorings are particularly good in this lot. Our values are especially good as we imported our own stock direct. Prices, $1.50 to $5.00 each.

TEMPTATION IS NOT SIN

CHRIST IS ABLE TO KEEP HIS PEOPLE FROM FALLING.

PROVIDES A WAY OF ESCAPE

St. Paul's Great Natural Law—Trial Is the Lot of Everybody—None Are Exempt—Compassionate Is Sin—Color Blindness Typical Illustration — Faith In Jesus Christ the Only Antidote.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1907, by Frederick Dixon, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., March 31.—That temptation is the lot of all; that not in being tempted, but in insisting and yielding to temptation is sin, and that if we trust in God and seek to do right we will always find a way out is the lesson of this sermon. The text is I. Corinthians x. 13, "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man."

The scientists teach us that anthropology, or the science of man, is the crown of all the natural sciences, but subsidiary to it and contributory to its proper comprehension are the other natural sciences. Nature in the same method of working in all, and if we learn what she does in the lower spheres we shall know what she does in the higher. If we learn how the plants and the animals grow and thrive, we may infer that in a similar way man will grow and thrive. No man is absolutely unique. He is one of a species the members of which prosper under the same laws, or degenerate under the opposite conditions. Nature is a unit in this. In other words, the same inexorable natural laws which cause a rose or a lily or a hellotrope or a horse or a cow or a sheep or a robin or a blue bird or a trout or a black bass to do and to be what it is under certain conditions are the same inexorable biological laws which will compel man under certain conditions to do certain things. When we study the characteristics of a species we study in a broad sense the characteristics of all the individuals of that species, and there is no exception to the rule.

Now, Paul in the words of my text is enunciating a great natural law. He comes to us and says: "My brother, in your egotism you believe you are different from the rest of mankind. You may think that no man ever faced just the same trials and temptations and sorrows and bitter disappointments as you have. But in your loves, your hates, your sorrows and your temptations you are just like the generality of mankind. You are under the common law. You must eat as they eat. You will laugh as they laugh. You sleep as they sleep. You suffer from the cold and the heat as they suffer. You cry as they cry. You are tempted as they are tempted. You are liable to sin. Furthermore, you can be saved from your sins by the atoning blood of Jesus Christ as they can be saved. You are part of a great species of living creatures which is called the human family." Then Paul seems to pronounce the death knell of hope in the words of my text: "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man: but God is faithful who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will, with the temptation, also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it."

But there are mental temptations as well as physical. One may be sick a man may have a malformed body and he can have a malformed mind. His thinking apparatus may be all askew. In Bulgaria a short time ago there died a young woman of fifty years of age. She had the mind of a matured, developed woman. She could talk as a woman, but she had the body of a little six-months-old baby. She never physically grew after she was a few months old. She had to be fed with a spoon. She had the mind of a woman, yet she had only of a little child. In direct antithesis to this we often find men of fully matured physical bodies who are worse than children in intellect. Their minds are warped and twisted out of form. They have such malformed intellects that they cannot think aright. They cannot tell the difference between right and wrong. In their own strength they are intellectually color blind.

You know what I mean by a man having defective color sight. When the applicant for a locomotive engineer's position applies to the railroad they test his eyes, and the chief rule by which the official tests the applicant? He takes him into a room where there are a lot of worsted yarns all jumbled up together. "Now, you go and pick me out the blue skeins," says the examiner. "Now pick me out the red." The difference between the colors of red and white may involve the safety of hundreds of passengers that an engineer may have in his charge. Some of you may be surprised to learn that hundreds of would be engineers have been rejected because the optic nerves which connect their eyes with their brains could not carry their messages aright. So there are hundreds and thousands of men whose brains are defective. They cannot think aright. They cannot tell right from wrong. I am born after his magnet. Whenever he comes to a fire sure when he is awake or awake he jumps it and will not stop until he is dead. Now, on the other hand, the man has not such heredity, but has a good deal of the sense of justice of government and of rules and regulations, goes into a burning house and when he returns he has on his back a pack filled with the texts of fire.

Mr. Beecher was showing that every man's mind is a law unto itself. If that mind is a malformed or one afflicted with its color blindness, it will cover with false colors and will call object its eyes focus, just the same as the man who is color blind. The color blindness may think the red light of warning is the white light of safety.

Now, the power of the Holy Spirit may come into our lives and teach us to think aright. Through the Holy Spirit we can get a revelation of what the divine sacrifice means. Through him we can truly get an infinite grasp of what the words "Jesus Christ our Saviour" mean to the troubled, sinful heart. Oh, the sins of the mind! Oh, the awful results of wrong thinking to the human heart! This mental fog is like any other kind of fog—suffocating. If you have ever crossed the Atlantic, you know well what I mean. When you come to the banks of Newfoundland, the fogs settle about you so thick that you cannot see the prow of the ship from the stern. Then the foot lears step and the deep throated fog horn begins to call. Every time that hoarse note goes rolling over the waters it seems to be echoed by ships and fishing smacks, where are you? Then off in the distance you will hear a faint answer calling:

"Here am I! Beware! Beware! Beware!" So in the mental fogs of doubt and skepticism, in the fogs of skepticism which envelop every human heart, there is but one right course. Slow up. Send forth thy cry for guidance. Call and keep calling: "Jesus, where is thou? Jesus, where art thou?" Then amid the deepest, densest gloom of life thou will hear the Saviour's answer: "Here am I! Come to me! Come to me!" Oh, may the mental fog which have enveloped so many of us to-day be lifted by the sunshine of God's love. Then our doubts and skepticism are no worse than those which have been lifted from hundreds of bedeviled minds. "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man."

But there are temptations from without as well as temptations from within. There are temptations that come to us from other men, as well as temptations welling up in our own hearts. There are temptations social and commercial as well as spiritual. The prophet of old described himself as a little terror stricken bird, with a great flock of angry sparrows encircling it trying to peck it to death. Thus, when we see all the temptations which swoop down upon us from without, can we not cry out: "Mine heritage is unto me as a speckled bird. The birds about are against her. Come ye, assemble all the beasts of the field come to devour?" For truly wherever we go into the outside world Satan is ready to greet us with fierce temptations.

Don't you remember the old nursery fable where the spider stands at the door of his palace trying to get the fly to come in and banquet with him? Well, that is the way Satan stands at the door of the commercial and the social world begging his victims to come in and sup with him. He looks at us and smiles and says: "Come, join our social club! Come and learn how to drink wine and to gamble with us! Come and join our dancing cotillion! Of course certain of these entertainments may conflict with the better sentiments in your heart and mind; you can still be a member of the church and be just like hundreds and thousands of Christians who profess their religion and do not practice it." Or Satan sends acquaintances, who say, "Come, let us unite in wildcat speculations some of the moneys which have been left us in trust for the widow and the orphan." And, though the average man would not be dishonest if left to himself, yet when some of these worldly temptations come to him from without he yields because other men about him are accustomed to sin in the same way.

I always look upon the infectious nature of sin a great deal as I do upon the transmitting power of an electric current. When we were young I had a classmate who was an electric battery. Then he used to stand on boys around in the class and we would shake hold of the handles of the electric battery. Then my classmate would turn on the current, and this current would go running from hand to hand until it had made a complete circuit. If two of those men would unclasp their hands, instantly the circuit would be broken and the current stopped. So I believe Satan sends the currents of temptation through the hearts and the minds and the souls of men. He engages in about in circles. Then he gets us all to clasp hands. Then because men by our side sin we are liable to sin with other men sin.

But, though there is a pernicious companionship of sin, there is a saving companionship in Jesus Christ. When you clasp hands with Christ, with evil men, with sinful men, the currents of spiritual power leap through your soul. When you clasp hands with good men, with God fearing men, with Christian men, the currents of spiritual life will go coursing through your minds and hearts and souls.

Now, my brother, the question for you to decide to-day is not whether you are tempted worse than any other man has been tempted. Your spiritual temptations are the same as have been common to man. The great question for you to decide is whether you are willing to clasp hands with Jesus Christ and with good men who are struggling to save a sinful world and let the divine currents of redemption leap through your mind and hearts and souls as the electric current goes coursing over the wires. In other words, to-day are you going to break the divine circuits which would save and redeem you and give yourselves up to the evil currents which will be to the eternal ruin of your souls?

If we clasp hands with Jesus Christ, if we clasp hands with Christian men, if we get in touch with the divine life, we shall ourselves become divine. Now, my friends, the question is for you and me to decide this: With whom shall we clasp hands? Shall we clasp hands with Christ? If you clasp hands with Satan, you must be destroyed by Satan. If you clasp hands with Jesus Christ, you shall by the promises of God be filled with eternal life. The current will you seek to-day, the divine current of spiritual power which comes straight from the throne of God or the current of evil by which you will be forever destroyed? It is God's name which current will you choose? Hear you not God's promise. "There hath no temptations taken you but such as is common to man, but God is faithful who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able, but will, with the temptation, also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it."

You perhaps started with nothing, and everything, so you use a slang expression, "seems to be coming your way." Your business has been going ahead by leaps and strides. The result is you have been overworking that body. You cannot sleep at night. When you arise for breakfast in the morning you are more tired than when you went to bed. A SPRING DANGER.

MANY PEOPLE WEAKEN THEIR SYSTEMS BY DOSING WITH PURGATIVE MEDICINES.

A spring medicine is a necessity. Nature demands it in the spring. The richer the blood and carrying off the impurities that have accumulated during the indoor life of the winter months. But people who are in need of a spring medicine do not necessarily require a purgative. This is a mistake into which doctors and the public have fallen. The use of purgative medicines in the spring is responsible for more sickness than any other cause, possibly more disease. In the spring nature starts building up new tissue to replace the worn out tissue. The blood should be enriched and the whole system toned up. Purgatives cannot do this. What is needed is a tonic, and the best tonic the medical science has yet created is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. In this medicine actually makes new blood and this new blood carries health and strength to every organ and every tissue in the body. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills banish pimples and unsightly eruptions, drive out the germs that cause headaches, backaches, rheumatism, indigestion and the many other troubles that come from poor blood. They are the best medicine for women who have suffered greatly from headaches and backaches during the annual spring change. Mrs. Mabel Williams, Brockville, Ont., testifies to the benefit she has derived from using Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and says: "I suffered terribly from headaches and backaches during the spring change. I was weak and suffered greatly from dizziness. I could not sleep well and was troubled with a tongue like fur. I tried several medicines but got no relief until I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. After using a few boxes the duty disappeared and I felt like a new girl. I can get the genuine Pink Pills with the full name, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, on the wrapper around each box. Refuse all substitutes and imitations. Sold by medicine dealers or by mail, post paid, at 50c a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

When buying flour, ask for Dafoe's, and if your dealer does not keep it, order direct from us. We guarantee that you can purchase cheaper from us than any of the Western mills, which has to be transported thousands of miles, at great expense and usually, when it reaches you, is not fresh milled.
The grocer complains if the farmer or the manufacturer sends in poor flour to outside points for an article he can get at the home market, and we do not see why he does not hesitate to buy flour that is shipped from mills hundreds of miles away, and sell you an inferior flour for the same money than you can purchase the home product for, every bag of which is guaranteed.
Choice corn meal and buckwheat flour always on hand. Feed grinding a specialty, with the best feed mills known to the trade.

3 CHILDREN WHO WERE COVERED WITH SORES

Wonderful Zam-Buk Triumph!

Every mother knows with what rapidity sores, ringworm, ulcers, etc., spread from child to child. In Montreal recently most of the public schools were visited by an epidemic of itch in this way. A child is afflicted with scalp sores, itch or ringworm. In the course of play, one child puts on another's hat. In this way, or in a hundred and one more which children can possibly think of, it spreads and sometimes a whole family is affected. Mr. J. C. Bates, of Falls says:—"My three children were all broken out with sores on face, hands and feet. Their condition was pitiable; and although I tried various ointments and salves the sores continued to spread.

One day I saw a report telling how beneficial Zam-Buk was for skin diseases, cuts, etc. I got a supply of the balm and applied it to the children's sores. The disease had defied all the salves I had previously tried, in one week Zam-Buk had overcome the trouble. The children have not a pimple spot, or speck of disease on their skin. For this grand result I have Zam-Buk to thank."

Wood writes on "Labor Leaders of the West," on the "The Awakening of Spring." Mrs. Jean Blewett has a good literary article. WISE AND OTHERWISE.

"What cunning little darlings!" exclaimed the city girl on seeing a number of fluffy chicks in the poultry yard.

"They are incubator chickens, miss," explained the poultry dealer, and was born weaned.

Carefully Prepared Pill. — Many times and annoyed sore expended the experimenting with the ingredients entering into the composition of Burdock's Vegetable Pills before they were brought to the state of perfection they were first offered to the public, and many years have gone by since Burdock's Vegetable Pills are the result of much experience and all persons suffering from dyspepsia or disorder of the liver and kidneys may confidently accept them as being what they are represented to be.

"Will you," asked the prisoner-thing attorney, kindly explain to the jury why you left home days with their property?" "Well," replied the expert witness, "he built a house and lived there long ago, and really thought he wasn't going to rent any more than a mortgage and some transfer liens would."

A Successful Medicine. — Everyone wishes to be successful in any undertaking in which he engages, and success is therefore, extremely gratifying to the proprietors of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills to know that their efforts to compound a medicine that would prove a blessing to mankind have been successful, is evidenced by numerous testimonials. The confession of these pills by the public is a guarantee that a pill has been produced which will relieve suffering and prolong life.

In its initial stages a cold is a social ailment usually dealt with. But many neglect it, and the result is often the development of distressing seizures of the bronchial tubes and lungs that render life miserable for the sufferer. As a first aid there is nothing in the family medicine line that equals Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, the far-famed remedy for colds and coughs.

"Shure and you have turned very industrious lately, Mr. Finnigan," said Mr. Flannigan.

"Faith! I'll, thought!" said Mr. Flaherty. "And, by the same token, I'll go and get a copy from each of you."

"No, behind, I'm not," said Finnigan. "I'll be glad to make up the $10 for the fine."

The "Jolts" and "Jars" of Life

Most people live pretty well up to the limit of their powers, and so long as everything goes smoothly that is apparently all right; but a "jolt" or a "jar" in the shape of business worries, domestic anxieties, or an attack of La Grippe, Pneumonia, Typhoid, or other wasting disease, suddenly reveals the fact that there is a sad lack of reserve force to meet these contingencies and the result is serious, often fatal. A wise man will see to it that his system is fully fortified against sudden attack. To attain this result nothing is so sure and effective as

This fact has been fully established by actual experience. If, therefore, you feel you are not in first-class shape physically, do not fail to take a course of FERROL at once. It contains Cod Liver Oil, Iron and Strychnine—just what you need, it is easy to take, never fails, and you

3c. a day will Cure Rheumatism.

The aim of most "cures" for Rheumatism seems to be to relieve the pain. When they have done that, their usefulness is gone. And the next time you take cold, or your feet get wet, or you overexert yourself, back comes the pain.

BU-JU

is different. It does relieve the pain, as quickly as the best liniment. And it does MORE. IT REMOVES THE CAUSE of Rheumatism, uric acid in the blood.

Every drop of blood passes through the kidneys. These organs should filter out impurities. When they are weak, inflamed or diseased, the impurities stay in the blood and are carried to the sensitive nerves. Rheumatism is simply this irritation of the nerves, caused by uric acid and other impurities being deposited upon them—their favorite feeding place by the joints and muscles. Make the Kidneys filter the blood properly, keep the blood pure and rich, and there can be no Rheumatism. Bu-Ju does this.

Buy Bu-Ju on an unconditional guarantee that they will cure you or money refunded. At all druggists, 50c. a large box, or sent on receipt of price.

A HANDSOME CHEQUE.

Warden Gallagher made a hasty trip to Toronto on Wednesday, re county roads, and returned with a cheque for the county of $6,333.18, being one-third of the expenditure on county roads in 1906. This undoubtedly will be pleasing news to the ratepayers of the county. It was only by hard work and steady persistency this amount was obtained, as the handling of the whole county road system was in many ways contrary to the act in reference to the good road requirements. The County Council purposes to add to this sum a like amount and have the same spent in a systematical way by our road supervisor, which will be closely watched by a committee of council. We only hope their good resolutions may be carried out this year.

The Day-light Store

Any More—"It's Madill's"—The Big Store

It's the price that counts; other things being equal, the price settles the matter at once. Napanee purchasers are intelligent. They know when qualities are equal, hence they know when prices are low. Our customers also know that we are entirely out of the high-priced district. It is the cost price, particularly, that counts, because it always averages lower than the charge price. We sell as we buy, exclusively for cash, and besides give a substantial guarantee. We also enjoy the fact of knowing that this establishment has the confidence of the buying public.

Perfection in Weave and Color—Richness of Quality—These combined make

Priestleys' Panneau Cloth

An Ideal Fabric for Fashionable Costumes.

DRESS FABRICS

Its a good thing to tie to, a Dress Goods House which knows the value of making good selections as well as possessing the judgment to select, especially in the matter of Dress Fabrics. That is why the Spring and Summer line of Dress Fabrics shown at the Madill establishment is so much superior in style, quality and elegance than you would generally see. This season's line of Priestley's, for which we are sole agents for Napanee; also the most generally worn of all Dress Goods is supremely marvellous in their beauty and effects.

Our line at 75c and $1.00 has no equal, and such a range cannot be seen in the district outside of this store.

Striving to meet the demands of the intelligent people of this vicinity for Carpets of new design, newest colorings and the best patterns procurable, and looked upon as the "go ahead" house for goods to please, we have gained first place. In fact our salesrooms are enjoying such an enormous cut put of carpet we had to install a carpet machine, finding that human hands were not fast enough and could not do the work as satisfactorily as the improved carpet machine, which is only necessary to be used where an enormous business is done, thus giving people the carpet while they wait, in perfect condition to put right on the floor, already stretched without any extra charge whatever. Drop in and see this machine work. We would be pleased to have you inspect the work. You will undoubtedly hear different comments on this machine other than the above, but money talks and with quality to follow up the savings there will be for you on carpets. The business keeps bounding ahead.

FAMOUS PEOPLE
BY FANNIE M. LOTHROP

Otto Sarony Co., New York

EVANGELINE BOOTH
The Salvation Army's American Leader.

The Salvation Army, one of the most remarkable religious movements in the world, is a great organized body going out into the highways and byways of humanity. It seeks out and bring the church to the people rather than merely to urge the people to the church. It has made religion a warm, inspiring reality to thousands. It has been practical, for it has carried the divine word to the poor, the sinning, the sorrowing and the suffering, and with it has ever extended the hand of true brotherhood. Its methods need no vindication; its transformed lives due to its influence are its living monuments.

The new leader of the Army in the United States is a young woman, Eva Booth, the daughter of the venerable General Booth, founder of the organization. Tall, slender, energetic, she has a strong, fine, far-reaching voice, she strikingly resembles her father, and went to America after her triumphant crusade in Canada with the reputation of being one of the best women orators in the world. She has a strength, sincerity and spiritual fervor that carry her audiences with her and sweep them on waves of religious fervor to higher spirituality.

As a child with her sweet face and her little jingling tambourine, she ventured into the slums of Darkest London and fared without a tremor, degradation she could not understand; but which the sunshine of the love she radiated was at last to penetrate and soften. For a time she was compelled to go disguised as a flower-girl, but after suffering personal violence more than a hundred times and bravely leading her people where the police rarely ventured and were always needed, she finally triumphed, and to-day the name of Eva Booth is held in reverence in even the worst sections of London.

Through her personal influence obnoxious laws regarding public religious meetings in the streets of England have been repealed, and under her leadership the Army in England calmed the temper of street mobs and vanquished their opposition. She went to Canada and failed to work, in the fur mines; undismayed she went into the mines under the sea, with the surf roaring overhead, to visit the stokehold; she carried the Army message to the weavers of the Midlands, and braved fierce mobs of rebellious employees; even in the Canadian backwoods, in the sparsely settled districts, she traveled bravely through the deep snow and storm, bringing cheer to men in the lumber camps. To-day she is the ruler of nearly 4,000 paid officers and more than 125,000 of an organized force that ministers day and night, unceasingly, to the temporal and spiritual needs of the three million people.

Entered according to Act of the Parliament of Canada, in the year 1907, by W. C. Rand, at the Department of Agriculture.

WHAT WOMEN WANT IN MEN.

It is no recently that women have been allowed to think, or expected to have opinions, and even now they are hate not expressed themselves upon the question of what they want in men. They have been brought up on the old philosophy. "Be good and you'll be married," and the rest has been a question of what they like in men, not what to penetrate and soften. For a time she was compelled to go disguised as a flower-girl, but after suffering personal violence more than a hundred times and bravely leading her people where the police rarely ventured and were always needed, she finally triumphed, and to-day the name of Eva Booth is held in reverence in even the worst sections of London.

MORVEN.

Mr. Percy Joyce, of Toronto, spent his Easter holidays at his home, Mr. Beaver Joyce.

Owing to our missionary collectors so very busy, calling on their friends, our grand social was postponed to be held in the Brick church, on Thursday evening, April 18th, when a very interesting programme was opened by the Morven choir, by the chairman, Rev. Mr. Mc. M. C. Hogart, of Napanee, followed by a solo, Mr. Geo. Thorpe, of Napanee, consisting of Miss Carol, Miss Hesselgrave and Mr. Young, which gave a much appreciated selection. Mr. Pybus, of Napanee, gave two recitations, a solo, and duet swinging with Mr. Thorpe, all of which were given in a splendid style. Mr. Shorey, of Newburgh, gave two solos, which were very much enjoyed and rendered in excellent style. The Quartet and Mr. Pybus' recitations, Miss Chant and Mr. F. Nesbit were very much appreciated. The whole programme was opened by the Morven choir, and was very much enjoyed by a crowded house. Collection was taken up, which was very much increased by the generous donations of true friends, among whom are Mr. Gibbard, Napanee, who gave evidence of a good programme. Mr. Percy Joyce, Toronto, very kindly lend their Buster Brown Moving Picture Machine, which completed the programme given by the choir, and plenty of cakes, candies, etc., were also amounted to about $16.00.

The sudden death of Mr. M. Irish, an old resident of this place, removed one more link in connection with the early settlers. Much sympathy is extended to the bereaved family.

Mr. Chas. Smith is sporting a dandy new driving horse.

We are pleased to see Mrs. G. G. Bird, Napanee, visiting her parents for a few days.

Mr. Bayes is the order of the day. Boys, keep away from the girls' school, for we are delighted to be entertained by the very large congregation that filled the church on Wednesday evening, Quartettes, etc., a ladies' quartette by Misses Hesselgrave, Carol, Chant and Farnell and Horton, Mrs. Horton and Mrs. Hesselgrave, Mr. Young, who was favored with the service they had rendered, and Mr. Thorpe, of Napanee, Mr. Horton, had renovated sufficiently to take charge of the service.

Because of the animals are so weakened that they will die before reaching the end of the long journey they are making. The dead animals are lying just where they have dropped and dotted the prairie. One of the chief causes of the C. N. Men and Women Unanimous About It.

Many women weep and wail and refuse to be comforted because their once magnificent tresses have become thin and faded. Many men incline to profanity because the fine hits through the thin thatch on their craniums. It will be good news, most miserable of both sexes, to learn that Newbro's Herpicide has been placed upon the market. This is the new scalp germicide and antiseptic that acts by destroying the germ or microbe that is the underlying cause of all hair destruction. Herpicide is a new preparation, made after a new formula on an entirely new principle. Anyone who has tried it will testify as to its worth. Try it yourself and be convinced. Mrs. Timmerman died very suddenly from heart trouble, after an illness of only a few days. She was born in Napanee, Augusta Bleecker, daughter of the late Rev. C. THE PALACE HOTEL.

The Vancouver Daily World says of the opening of Mulqueen's new hotel at Kelowna, B.C.:

The Palace Hotel was rented last year at a rate of over $20,000 by Mr. Mulqueen, who has made the hotel not only to Kelowna but the whole Okanagan and Mainline country, and is superbly furnished throughout, in a manner which will please the most exacting guest on the coast. English carpets in the parlors and dining room, and the rooms throughout are of the best. The proprietor being of an extensive experience in the business will personally attend to the wants of his guests. A great deal of room has been added to the hotel, which now comprises 75 rooms, all large and well appointed, the halls, staircases and corridors are wide, and the bedrooms and sanitary arrangements are of the most modern and approved description, while the steamers are of sufficient size to ferry the guests across the lakes. Everything in the hotel is new, and the rooms are all being thoroughly attended to. The hotel will be opened for the reception of guests about the middle of April.

During the past winter a much greater number of guests than usual have put up at the Palace Hotel, and a large percentage of them have been repeaters. This is a step in the right direction, and it is hoped that the hotel will be crowded. Among the guests registered during the winter were some fine specimens of sportsmen, who came to the district for the purpose of shooting deer, several great horned moose and smaller game, and also a number of Calgary hawks and a few small game birds. Ducks, geese, partridges and prairie chickens were also plentiful, and the sportsmen were delighted with the district. Mr. Mulqueen, the proprietor, is a genial host, and will see that his guests are well looked after.

Rheumatism

I have found a tried and tested cure for Rheumatism! Not a remedy that will straighten the distorted limbs of chronic cripples, nor turn bony growths back to flesh and muscle. That is impossible. But I can now surely kill the pains and purge of this deplorable disease.

In Germany—with a Chemist in the City of Darmstadt—I found the last ingredient with which Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Remedy was made a perfected, dependable prescription. Without that last ingredient, I never could get trusted results in many cases of Rheumatism; but now, at last, impossibly even all chronic cases of this heretofore most dreaded disease. Those dull, blue persistent aches, found in Rheumatic Blood, seem to disperse and pass away under the action of this remedy as freely as does sugar when added to pure water. And then, when dissolved, those poisonous wastes freely pass from the system, and the cause of Rheumatism is gone forever. There is now no real need—no normal cause to suffer longer without help. We sell, and in confidence recommend

BY A. CONAN DOYLE.

Author of "The Green Flag" and "The Great Boer War."

"He found a way out of his difficulties through the chance that Sir Charles, who had conceived a friendship for him, made him the minister of his charity in the case of this unfortunate woman, Mrs. Laura Lyons. By representing himself as a single man he acquired complete influence over her, and he gave her to understand that in the event of her obtaining a divorce from her husband he would marry her. His plans were suddenly brought to a head by his knowledge that Sir Charles was about to leave the Hall on the 4th inst. Mortimer, with whose opinion he himself pretended to coincide, His must act at once, or his victim might get beyond his power. He therefore put pressure upon Mrs. Lyons to write the letter, imploring the old man to give her an interview on the evening before his departure for London. He then, by a specious argument, prevented her from going, and so had the field to himself while he had waited.

"Driving back in the evening from Coombe Tracey he was in time to get home, to thread it with the infernal paint, and to bring the beast round to the gate at which he had reason to expect that he would find the old gentleman waiting. The dog, incited by its master, sprang over the low hedge and pursued the unfortunate baronet, who fled screaming down the Yew Alley. In that gloomy tunnel it must indeed have been a dreadful sight to see that huge black creature, with its flaming jaws and blazing eyes, bounding after its victim. He fell dead at the end of the alley from heart disease and terror. The hound had kept upon the grassy border while the baronet had run down the path, so that no track but the man's was visible. On seeing him lying still the creature had probably approached to sniff at him, but finding him dead had returned at once again. It was then that it left the print which was actually observed by Dr. Mortimer. The hound was called off and hurried away to its lair in the Grimpen Mire, and a mystery was left which puzzled the authorities, alarmed the countryside, and finally brought the case within the scope of our observation.

"So much for the death of Sir Charles Baskerville. You perceive the motive and the cunning of it, for really it would be almost impossible to make a case against the real murderer. His line of procedure was one which would never give him away, and the grotesque but unbelievable nature of the device only served to make it more effective. Both of the women concerned in the case, Mrs. Stapleton and Mrs. Laura Lyons, were left with a strong suspicion against Stapleton. Mrs. Stapleton knew that he had designs upon the old man, and also of the existence of the hound. Mrs. Lyons knew neither of these things, but had been impressed by the death opportune for the time of an uncancelleth appointment which was only known to him. However, both of them were under his influence, and he had nothing to fear from them. The first half of his task was successfully accomplished, but the more difficult still remained.

"It was clear that Stapleton did not know of the existence of an heir in Canada. In any case he would very soon learn it from his friend Dr. Mortimer, and he was told by the latter all details about the arrival of Henry Baskerville. Stapleton's first idea was that this young stranger from Canada might possibly be done to death in London without coming down to Devonshire at all. He dismissed his wife ever since she had refused to help him in laying a trap for the old man, and he dared not leave her alone out of his sight for fear he should lose his influence over her. It was for this reason that he took her to London with him. They lodged, first, at the Mexborough Private Hotel, in Craven Street, which was actually one of those called upon by my agent in search of evidence. Here he kept his wife imprisoned in her room while he, disguised in a beard, followed Dr. Mortimer to Baker Street and afterwards to the station and to the Northumberland Hotel. His wife had some inkling of his game; but she had such a fear of her husband that she founded upon brutal ill-treatment—that she dare not write to warn the man whom she knew to be in danger. If we letter abused further the Stapleton's hands her own life would not be safe. Eventually, as we know, she adopted the expedient of cutting out the words which would form the message, and addressing the letter in a disguised hand. It reached the baronet, and gave him the first warning of his danger.

"It was very essential for Stapleton to get some article of Sir Henry's at once so that, in case he was driven to use the dog, he might have the means of setting him upon his track. With characteristic promptness and audacity he set about this at once, and we cannot doubt that the boots or chambermaid of the hotel were well bribed to help him in his design. By chance, however, the first boot which was procured for him was a new one and, therefore, useless for his purpose. He then had it returned and obtained another—a most instructive incident, since it proved conclusively to my mind that we were dealing with a real hound, as no other supposition could explain this anxiety to obtain an old boot and this indifference to a new one. The more outre, and grotesque an incident is the more carefully it deserves to be examined, and the very point which appears to complicate a case is, when duly considered and scientifically handled, the one which is most likely to elucidate it.

"Then we had the visit from our friends next morning, always working in ways by Stapleton in the dark. From his knowledge of our rooms and of my appearance, as well as from his general conduct, I am inclined to think that Stapleton's career of crime must have been by no means limited to this single Baskerville affair. It is suggestive that during the last three years there have been four considerable burglaries in the West Country, for one of which was any criminal ever arrested. The last of these, at Folkestone Court, in May, is remarkable for the cold-blooded pistoling of the page, who surprised the masked and solitary burglar. I cannot doubt that Stapleton recruited his wearing resources in this fashion, and that for years he has been a desperate and dangerous man.

"We had an example of his readiness of resource that morning when he got away from us so successfully, and also of his audacity in sending back my own name to me through the cab-man. From that moment he understood that I had taken over the case in London, and that from then there was no chance for him there. He returned to Dartmoor and awaited the arrival of the baronet."

"One moment!" said I. "You have, no doubt, described the sequence of events correctly, but there is one point which you have not explained. What became of the hound when its master was in London?"

"I am glad you have put some attention to this matter and it is undoubtedly of importance. There can be no question that Stapleton had a confidant, though it is unlikely that he ever placed himself openly in his power by sharing all his plans with him. There was an old manservant at Merripit House, whose name was Anthony. His connection with the Stapletons can be traced for several years, as he was in charge of Merripit House during part of the first year that they resided there. This man, like Mr. Stapleton himself, spoke good English, but still had curious linguistic accent. I have myself seen this old man cross the Grimpen Mire by the path which Stapleton had marked out. It is very probable, therefore, that in the absence of his master it was he who cared for the hound, though he may never have known the purpose for which the beast was used.

"The Stapletons then went down to Devonshire, whither they were soon followed by Sir Henry and you. One word now as to how I shaped myself at that time. It may possibly recur to your memory that when I examined the paper upon which the printed words were fastened I made a close inspection for the watermark. In doing so I held it within a few inches of my eyes, and was conscious of a faint smell of the scent known as white jessamine. There are seventy-five perfumes, which it is very necessary that a criminal expert should be able to distinguish from each other, and cases have more than once within my own experience been decided upon their prompt recognition. The scent suggested the presence of a lady, and already my thoughts began to turn towards the Stapletons. Thus I had made certain of the hound, and was guessed as the criminal before ever we went to the West Country.

"It was my game to watch Stapleton. It was evident, however, that I could not do this if I were with you, since he would be keenly on his guard. I deceived everybody, therefore, yourself included, and I came down secretly when I was supposed to be in London. My hardest task was to keep you, as you imagined, though such trifling details must never interfere with the investigation of a case. I stayed at the most part at Coombe Tracey, and only used the moor when the approach of it was necessary to be near the scene of action. Cartwright had come down with me, and he could be trusted in a country by he was of great assistance to me. I sent reports up to you from food and clean linen. When I was watching Stapleton, Cartwright was watching you, so that I was able to keep my hand upon all the strings.

"I have already told you that your reports reached me rapidly, being forwarded instantly from Baker Street to Coombe Tracey. They were of great service to me, especially as pointing out one incidentally truthful piece of biography of Stapleton's. I was able to establish the identity of the man and the woman, and knew at last exactly how I stood. The case had been considerably complicated through the appearance of the escaped convict and the relations between him and the Barrymores. This also you cleared up in a very effective way, though I had already come to the same conclusions from my own observations.

"By the time that you discovered me upon the moor I had a complete knowledge of the whole business, but I had not a case which could go to a jury. Even Stapleton's attempt upon Sir Henry that night, which ended in the death of the unfortunate convict did not help us much in proving murder against our man. There seemed to be no alternative but to catch him redhanded, and to do so we had to use Sir Henry, alone and apparently unprotected, as a bait. We did so, and at the cost of a severe shock to our client we succeeded in completing our case and driving Stapleton to his destruction. That Sir Henry should have been exposed to this is, I must confess, a reproach to my management of the affair, but we had no means of foreseeing the terrible and subtle influence against which the beast presented, nor could we predict the fog which enabled him to burst upon us at such short notice. We succeeded in our object at a cost which both the specialist and Dr. Mortimer assure me will be entirely recovered in time. A long journey may enable our friend to recover not only from his shattered nerves, but also from his wounded feelings. His love for the lady was deep and sincere, and to him the saddest part of all this black business was that she should have been deceived by her.

"The only remains to indicate the part which she had played in the matter. There can be no doubt that Stapleton exercised an influence over her which may have been love or may have been only that power which, since they are by no means incompatible, actions. It was, at least, absolutely effective.

"It was at his command she consented to pass as his wife when it brought her to the limit of his power over her when he desired her to pose as single that necessary to murder. She was ready to write Sir Henry to go far as she could without implicating her husband, and again and again she tried to do so. Stapleton himself seems to have been capable of jealousy, and when he saw the baronet paying court to the lady, even though it was part of his own plan, still he could not help interrupting with a passionate outburst which revealed the fiery soul which his self-contained manner so cleverly concealed. By encouraging the intimacy he made it certain that Sir Henry would frequently come to Merripit House and that he would sooner or later get the opportunity which he desired. On the day of the crisis, however, his wife turned suddenly against him. She had learned something of the death of the convict, and she knew that the hound was being kept in the out-house on the evening that Sir Henry was coming to dinner. She taxed her husband with his intended crime, and a furious scene followed, in which he showed her for the first time that she had a rival in his love. Her fidelity turned in an instant to bitter hatred and he saw that she would betray him. In this mood, therefore, that she might have no chance of warning Sir Henry, and he hoped, no doubt, when the whole country side got down the baronet's death to the curse of his family, as they certainly would do, he could win his wife back to accept a accomplished fact and to keep silent upon what she knew. In this I fancy that in any case he made a miscalculation, and that if he had not been there, his doom would soon have been sealed also. A woman of Spanish blood does not submit to such an injury so lightly. And now, my dear Watson, without pausing to my notes, I cannot give you a detailed account of this curious case. I do not know that anything essential has been left unexplained."

"He could not hope to frighten Sir Henry to death as he had done the old uncle with his bogie hound."

"The beast was savage and half starved. If its appearance did not frighten its victim to death, at least it would paralyze the resistance which it might offer."

"No doubt. There only remains one difficulty. If Stapleton came into the succession, how could he explain the fact that he, their half-brother, lived unannounced under another name so close to the property? How could he explain it without causing suspicion and inquiry?"

"It is a formidable difficulty, and I fear that you ask too much when you expect me to solve it. The past and the present are within the field of my inquiry, but what a man may do in the future is a hard question to answer. Mrs. Stapleton has heard her husband discuss the problem on several occasions. There were three possible courses. He might claim the property from South America, establish his identity before the British authorities there, and so obtain the fortune without ever coming to England at all; or he might adopt an elaborate disguise for the short time that he need be in London; or, again, he might furnish an accomplice with the proofs and papers, putting him in as the heir and reclaiming a claim upon some proportion of his income. We cannot doubt from what we know of the man that he would have found some way out of the difficulty. And now, my dear Watson, we have had some weeks of severe work, so for one evening, I think, we may turn our thoughts into more pleasant channels. I have a box for 'Les Huguenots.' They give us an hour and a half for dinner, and I think that you will find that it will be time enough if we make our arrangements within that limit."

NEW ODDFELLOWS' LODGE.

An unusual event occurred in this busy village on Tuesday evening, the 26 of April. About 7 o'clock, a good sized crowd were seen wending their way to the railway station, and when we enquired what was going on we were asked if we had not heard that there was to be a lodge organized. Order of Oddfellows, accordingly we hurried there. was a special train coming from Napanee with the lodge on board, and a band in waiting to greet. We went down to the G. T. Q. Ry station, and found a crowd of the citizens all waiting to hear the siren of the locomotive, and they did not have long to wait, as the train pulled in sharp on time. As the train pulled up at the station a ringing cheer was given the visitors, and upwards of sixty of the members from Napanee, accompanied by brethren from Odessa and Yarker, formed in procession and proceeded to Hro. Col. Cox's Hall, where they were met by brethren from Tweed, Marlbank, Tamworth, Fairham and Harrowsmith. Also by Bro. Huskeby, of Kingston, Past Grand representative, who in company with Bro. J. A. Tuley, of Frankford, and Deputy Organizer, who arrived earlier in the evening, and also the caterer, who is about the number of thirty or more, who were to constitute the charter list. The hall, which will be used by the new lodge, was appropriately prepared for this auspicious occasion. A supper of 86 had ordered to do but badge on their armour and go to work, which they did with a will from that time until 2.30 a.m.

After this the new members escorted the visitors to the Wheian and Hamilton hotels, where each party in waiting was prepared for them by the genial hosts, Mr. M. J. Wheian and Mr. J. Carroll, of the Wheian and Hamilton hotels respectively.

It is pulling it mild to say that all had been well used, this particular thoughtfulness of the Enterprise brethren, and they did ample justice to the good things provided by the hosts, and the writer, being an Independent Order of Oddfellows, can say that they were all happy.

The Enterprise brethren were escorted to their train, and with the hearty cheers they had given them escorted the foundation of what promises to be one of the most prosperous and enthusiastic lodges in the district.

The following brethren were elected and installed as officers of the new lodge, called the Rose Lodge No. 378, N. G., Ellis, N.G.

Indians Are Pagans Still.

Rev. J. Saman, Indian agent, has just completed his annual trip among the Indians on the Lake of the Woods and the Lake Winnipeg districts, and he states, in an interview at Winnipeg, that the Indians both in Western Ontario and Manitoba as far as he has visited them were in the best condition, having plenty of money, an abundance of food and being in an excellent state of health. Missionaries in the Lake of the Woods, he says, are still pagan, and the attitude of these natives to religion is quite decided. They refuse absolutely to allow their children to attend any school where religion is taught in any form to any extent. They have no objection to their children learning to write, read and cipher, but they are most determinedly opposed to the teaching of religion. The best means of dealing with the children of the Indians are in the boarding schools. There are schools at Norway House, Keneen, Shoal Lake, Fort Frances and at Port Alexander. In the Lake of the Woods district there is much more evidence of the influence of liquor, and its harmful effects of the natives of the country.

Huxley and Hunt in Canada.

One is sometimes disposed to consider "what might have been" in connection with Canada and Canadian institutions. For instance, Holman Hunt, the painter of that fadlous picture, "The Light of the World," once thought of coming to Canada to take up farming. Would Hunt have made Canada more artistic, and have evolved from the works here, or would he have become a poor farmer instead of a great painter; and done no good either for himself or for Canada. But an even more interesting speculation is that concerning Huxley, who once came near being a professor in Toronto University. Would the great scientist have been as successful as he was in England, or would the environment have cramped his energies? Would Huxley have been promoted and appreciated, or would he have been misunderstood and kept down, dwarfed for want of material and inspiration? In any event, it is in such men a nation lived and the more Canada can attract or develop the more rapid will be progress, the deeper and fuller her current of life.

Luxury For Paupers.

One of the members of the Epsom Board of Guardians, on the occasion of a recent visit to the workhouse, recorded his impressions in the visitors' book as follows: "I have inspected the house, and it seems to me the most comfortable dwelling-house in the town."

SLIPS OF THE TONGUE.

Some of the Queer Bulls That Have Been Recorded.

That man made a remark that had better have been left unsaid is, when the king found some fault with the art marshal for some details of the coronation ceremony, replied: "Please your majesty, I hope it will be better next time." Lord Iveagh made the following, which he characterizes as the best "bull" he ever heard: "I hate that Harrowman, Jones, always talking of one who had been his nurse. "I hate that woman, for she changed me as a nurse." A gentleman was once complimenting Mme. Denis on the manner in which she had just enacted the part of Zara. "To act that part," said she, "a person should be young and handsome." "Ah, madam," replied the would-be complimenter, "you are a proof to the contrary," which was a faux pas with a vengeance. In Ireland that is an execution in Ireland that the rope broke and the half-hanged victim fell to the ground, when the person who was superintending the execution said, "You rascal, if you don't again I'll kill you as sure as you breathe."

It was an Irish mayor who issued a proclamation stating that owing to business would be transacted in that city "except Monday" (Easter Sunday only excepted), which is capped by the preamble of an English bill which ordained that certain regulations should take place "on every Monday" (Christmas day excepted), while an English mayor on this clone in a proclamation and an advertisement relating to some forthcoming races, wherein it was stated that "no gentleman will be allowed to ride on the course but the horses that are to run."

A SPRING TONIC.
DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS MAKE RICH, RED HEALTH-GIVING BLOOD.
Cold winter months, enforcing close confinement in over-heated, badly ventilated rooms — in the home, in the shop and in the school — sap the vitality of even the strongest. The blood becomes clogged with impurities, the liver, always the blackest organ, becomes torpid, resultsue you awake just as tired as when you went to bed; you are nervous, perhaps have headache and suffer from a bad digestion. Every one of these symptoms is a reminder that the blood needs a spring medicine. Every one does something to help nature. Every one takes some new blood helps to strengthen the nerves, and drives the poisonous waste matter from the system. Of all spring medicines Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the most popular and successful. Thousands of people testify to the wonderful power of this medicine over all forms of spring troubles. Among them is Mrs. Jas. McDonald, Lyn, Ont., who says: "I was run down, felt very weak and had no appetite. I could hardly force myself about and felt that my condition was serious. I was advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and after using them I was as strong as ever. My appetite returned, I could eat heartily, do my housework without feeling tired. Zam-Buk was recommended to me, and I used it actively, applying it in a very short time the wounds were healed.

"At another time I sustained a very bad burn. Zam-Buk soon overcame almost instantly and soon healed the wound. I have also used Zam-Buk for other injuries, and I have no hesitation in expressing my high opinion of its value. It is without doubt a splendid household balm!"

The grocer complains if the farmer takes his produce and sells it for cash to outside points for an article he can't use, but the farmer can't use flour, yet he does not hesitate to buy it from Western mills knowing it is taken away, and sell you an inferior flour in exchange. AWFUL DISASTER.

Montreal, April 11.—According to an official statement made by the management of the C.P.R. to-day, with reference to the terrible disaster to the C.P.R. west-bound express, yesterday near Chapleau, there were fifteen lives lost, or, as the wording of the statement puts it, that number are missing. Nine adults and six children were down to their deaths and their remains were cremated. According to the official statement, the train was running at the usual speed, about twenty-two miles west of Chapleau, being the regular transcontinental train which left Montreal on Tuesday morning, when the train was partly derailed by a broken rail. Five cars ran down an embankment and caught fire, said to have been from the cooking range. It is believed the most of the dead were occupants of the tourist car and were pinned down in the wreckage, and were either killed outright or suffocated as the fire consumed the wreckage. It will be seen from the list of dead that women and children were the principal victims, there being only three men mentioned in the list of fifteen.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

Old stockings cut down the seam make excellent clothes for polishing furniture and floors, as well as soft iron holders.

Gasoline put on stains in a white silk waist, followed by a soft lump magnesia as the gasoline will take out well rubbed in, will generally remove the stains, says the Philadelphia "Inquirer."

When grease is spilled on the kitchen table or floor, pour cold water on it at once to prevent it soaking into the wood. It will quickly harden and can be lifted with a knife.

To remove soot from a carpet, sprinkle plenty of salt over it and sweep among the seam of the carpet. Repeat until every trace of the soot is removed.

In making down pillows go over the sewing side of the case with an iron rubbed well with beeswax each time it is applied to the cloth, to prevent the down working through the cloth.

Mattress should be washed every week and always kept in a clean, dry place. Many housekeepers use sufficient care in keeping the bed linen from irons to become red hot, as they will never again be clean. 15d

When wash dishes take out handkerchiefs, collars, cuffs and all small articles in the wash to dry in pillow case. The fabric is spared much rubbing by the wind, they will freeze dry and be quickly gathered for ironing.

Buy a strip of asbestos cloth at the hardware store and use small squares to interline your iron holders. Keep a good-sized piece fastened to your ironing board to save the shock, and try a square under the table pad where the meat platter rests.

Do not try to sweep an invalid's room, but wring a clean cloth out of cold water to which a few drops of ammonia have been added, and carefully wipe the carpet, insisting or floor turning and rinsing the cloth and changing the water as it gets dirty.

Charcoal in or sprinkled among good putters and windows or box draperies that are no longer fresh and attractive should be cut into squares and neatly hemmed for sick rooms. There should be a sufficient number on hand that they may be changed regularly with the face towels, as they last much longer and give more satisfactory service with frequent washings.

CHAPTER I.

TWO incidents, widely different in character yet bound together by results, marked the night of Jan. 23. On that night the blackest fog within a four years' memory fell upon certain portions of London and also on that night came the first announcement of the border risings against the Persian government in the province of Khorassan—the announcement that, speculated upon, ran smiled at, at the time, assumed such significance in the light of after events.

At 5 o'clock the news spread through the house of commons, but at 9 men in the inner lobbies were gossiping, not so much upon how far Russia, while ostensibly upholding the shah, had pulled the strings by which the insurgents danced, as upon the manner in which the St. George's Gazette, the Tory evening newspaper, had seized upon the incident and shaken it in the face of the government.

More than once before Lakely, the owner and editor of the St. George's, had stepped outside the decorous circle of tradition and taken a plunge into modern journalism, but tonight he exceeded deeper waters than before and under an almost sensational heading declared that in this apparently innocent border rising we had less an outcome of mere racial antagonism than a first faint index of a long cherished Russian scheme, growing to a gradual maturity under the "drift" policy of the present British government.

The effect produced by this pronouncement, if strong, was varied. Members of the opposition saw, or thought they saw, a reflection of it in the smiling unconcern on the ministerial benches, and the government had an uneasy sense that behind the newly kindled interest on the other side of the house lay some mysterious working of battle from afar off. But though these impressions ran like electricity through the atmosphere, nothing tangible marked their passage, and the ordinary business of the house proceeded until half past 11, when an adjournment was moved.

The first man to hurry from his place was John Chilcote, member for East Wark. He passed out of the house quickly, with the half furtive quickness that marks a self absorbed man, and as he passed the policeman standing stolidly under the arched doorway of the big courtyard he swerved a little, as if startled out of his thoughts. It was not usual for members before it was accomplished and pulled himself together with nervous irritability.

"Forgot something, constable," he said, with elaborate carelessness.

"Foggy night, sir, and thickening up very considerable," was the man's answer.

"Ah, indeed!" Chilcote's answer was absent. The constable's cheery voice fell on him, and for the second time he was conscious of unnecessary irritation. Without a further glance at the man, he slipped out into the courtyard and turned toward the main gate.

At the gateway two cab lamps showed through the mist of shifting fog like the eyes of a great cat, and the familiar "Hansom, sir?" came to him indistinctly.

He paused by force of custom and stepping forward, had almost touched the open door when a new impulse forced him to draw back.

"No," he said hurriedly; "no. I'll walk."

The cabman muttered, lashed his horse and, with a clatter of hoofs and harness, wheeled away, while Chilcote, with the unnecessary hesitation, crossed the road in the direction of Whitehall.

About the abbey the fog had partially lifted, and in the railed garden that faces the entrance of parliament the statues were visible in a spectral way. But Chilcote's glance was unstable and indifferent. He skirted the railings heedlessly and, crossing the road with the speed of long familiarity, gained Whitehall on the left hand side.

There the fog had dropped, and, looking upward he could distinguish stars. It seemed that the chain of lamps extended little farther than the House of Commons and that beyond lay nothing.

Unconscious of this capricious alternation between darkness and light, Chilcote walked on, seeming to a close observer the manner of his gait had both interest and suggestion, for there was in it an apparently self engrossed, yet at every pause a stage

CHARLES M. HAYS
President of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

One of the railroad men of the times who has mastered all the intricacies of railway work in his thirty-two years of continuous service, is Charles Melville Hays, president of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, and second vice-president and general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway. Born in 1856 at Rock Island, Ill., at the age of seventeen he began to learn the a-b-c of railroading, as clerk in the passenger department of the Atlantic and Pacific road at St. Louis. Then, after a year of this schooling, had proved his fitness, he was promoted to the auditor's department and later to the general superintendent's office. From 1878-86 he was assisting the dignity of general manager of Geo Gould, then general manager, later elected vice-president.

In the two latter positions Mr. Hays represented his company as director on the boards of the various companies in which his road was interested. In January, 1896, through the efforts of Sir Charles Rivers Wilson, he was made general manager of the Grand Trunk at $25,000 a year with a five years' contract. The larger department of the Atlantic and Pacific road at St. Louis. Then, after a year of this schooling had proved his fitness, he was promoted to the auditor's quickly and properly administered, and deft surgery work in the way of cutting secretary to the general manager of Geo Gould, then general manager, later elected vice-president.

Mr. Hays made it clear that, as he was to be responsible for results, he must be free to select his own means to produce them. He was not to be a puppet nor a figure-head. He must have the support of the Board of Directors in carrying out what he decided the road needed. As the Grand Trunk had to meet American competition, it must win its way by recognizing and applying American methods. Opposition, clear-cut business system, with the most ci tradition all removed. Mr. Hays practically did this and he saw that the medicine was administered.

Old railroads that should long before have been put on the retired list were taken down, and in their places steel bridges substituted; the road was double-tracked; prime Standard Rail rules and regulations were quickly relegated to the scrap heap; switch pitch; the rolling stock made the latest and best; slow trains were displaced by fast ones. The road was transformed from a snailway to a railway; and trained men took the places of the old men whose one merit was influence at the home office.

In 1901 Mr. Hays retired to accept the presidency of the Southern Pacific, but the position proving distasteful, he was again secured for the Grand Trunk and is now busy with this road and his new project—the Grand Trunk Pacific R.R.

GOT HIS HAIR BACK.
Was Perfectly Bald When He Started to Use Nowbro's Herpicide.
Frederick Mansell, Maryland block, Butte, Montana, bought a bottle of Nowbro's Herpicide, April 6, '99, and began to use it for entire baldness. The hair follicles in his scalp were not dead and in 28 days he had hair all over his head. On July 2 he writes, "and today my hair is as thick and luxuriant as any one could wish." Nowbro's Herpicide works on an old principle and with a new discovery—destroy the cause and you remove the effect. Herpicide destroys the germ that causes dandruff, falling hair, and finally baldness, so that with the cause gone the effect cannot remain. Stops falling hair at once and a new growth will start. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c. in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. Regular size 50 cents and $1.00.

Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets
Are just for women
and Contain just what every Sick and Run-down Woman Needs.
There is now that distinguished physician—that ninety per cent. of the ills of women result from your peculiar condition.
To help you make clear to you the need and advantage of taking a remedy that contains uterine and female tonics.
You know, of course, that remedies made to sell to men as well as women do not contain these. They cannot.
Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women are the only ones that have all these. Chemists and physicians, whose standard makes their statements reliable, say that not one single medical ingredient of importance to women has been omitted from them.
What is the result? Simply this.
When you buy a box of these tablets you get a home compounded tonic for your special needs, and one containing all that medical science can supply in this twentieth century to make you a healthy woman. What more could you ask?
And unless your experience should be different than that of other women, you need not be told more. If you don't feel as well as you would like to, try these tablets.
They Make Healthy Women.

Winnipeg Letter.

Winnipeg, Man., April 6th, '07.

Editor of The Beaver:—

Dear Sir,—Although it is some years since I left my native city and struck out for the west in search of fame and the elusive dollar, and although I know fondly taken up my permanent abode in Winnipeg, still the home papers are of the happy days spent in old home town, the memory of which is treasured fondly. Between and the familiar associations of the home paper, and the thoughts that cling to me always, and from them I glean many pleasurable moments.

I have always maintained a strong interest in your paper, watching its growth with pride, satisfaction, and it occurred to me that you and your readers might be somewhat interested in news from the west. In this regard I am in about the same position as a girl with a real good secret. I am just bursting to tell some one and as I know, and I take a story that you as a newspaper man cannot fail to be interested in. It would be hard indeed to find in Winnipeg, or, in fact, any of the prairie cities, a more optimistic people, or a people more thoroughly convinced of the future without becoming an enthusiast. For all that I am in this respect.

The city is fairly throbbing with life and energy these days in an effort to keep pace with the marvelous growth of the west, the natural outgrowth of the pioneer days, when the city was confined to the limits of the city. Huge factories are springing up, new warehouses and business blocks are in course of construction, and the residential portion of the city is expanding at a rate unprecedented in the annals of any other city of the Dominion. The building permits issued for 1906 will total over $12,000,000 in value. The number of the new buildings constructed that will be announced at $11,357,475. Compare this with the figures for 1906 when the total value reached $6,752,580, or more than twice the amount of the year before. During last year the total cost of the new buildings constructed amounted to $12,740,450 or almost half the total value of all the buildings within the city previous to 1906. No further comment is necessary to show that these figures talk loudly for themselves.

We find it a hard proposition to convince people, even in Winnipeg, that only thirty years ago it was a howling wilderness, known as Fort Garry, and having a population of only a few hundred souls, mostly half-breeds and Indians. Now it has a population of 101,057 inhabitants, and is the centre of the vast area whose population, between Lake Superior and the Rocky Mountains, is increasing at the rate of 400 per day, or 146,000 per annum. For every day in the year 400 settlers arrive at the gateway of the west—Winnipeg. For every man, woman and child in the city there are two acres of land within the city limits. Some of the streets are 132 feet wide, and are lined with trees, while the boulevards are 100 feet wide. Each street is provided with the finest system of public lighting in the world, and the whole city is graded and provided with cement sidewalks. The population of Winnipeg, which is invariably referred to by visitors to the city as a little heard it remarked somewhere else, "Work, wages, happiness" and perhaps this is the secret, for the people are a busy, prosperous, happy people.

I would like to let me say that at present any of your readers come to Winnipeg they should not fail to investigate the wonderful resources of the country that have made it possible what attempted to describe, for it would take a very lengthy account of a series of remarkable successes to do justice to the subject.

Yours sincerely,
PERRY W. MADDEN.

HIS LAST PORTAGE.

From The Canadian Courier.

The death of Dr. W. H. Drummond brings a sense of personal loss, not only to those who knew the man—a genuine, warm-hearted Irishman—but also to thousands of friends who knew him only through his writings. His last book, "The Voyageur," published only a few months ago, is a most delightful addition to the literature of the north, and is a most scientific interpretation of the habitant—the type of Canadian that he knew and loved best. They are natives with the strength of the pine and the stubbornness of the rock in the midst of the commonplace, the earth cliffs, bare-crowned hills and the rugged pines—all these form a background for the quaint figure of Jean Baptiste who lives and toils and sings and loves and fights and dies with pain and Gartier loved. He has left us a gallery of quaint, humorous and light-hearted adventure, which will live as long as the people of Quebec and Canada, and that, Winnipeg situated at the apex of the vast prairie area, the central point from which all supplies are distributed.

At the present time only 7,235,447 acres of this great land are under cultivation, but the amount of grain harvested from this comparatively small area during 1906 will reach approximately ninety millions of bushels. In connection it may be interesting to note that the total wheat crop for the year in Western Canada, from 1900 to 1905 was 185,000,000 bushels, as compared with Minnesota, North Dakota, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska 124, and South Dakota 109,000,000 bushels each. Western Canada expected 80,000 head of cattle in 1906, and this number of cattle was sold locally to bring the total number to 400,000 head. Western Canada is the best wheat country in the world in the stock exchanges.

With the present tremendous influx of immigrants to the west many years will not elapse before all the land is taken up. During the year 1906 a total of 189,064 people came into the country of which 97,749 came from the United States, and 131,000 from Great Britain. During the month of March last Dominion Immigration Department estimates that 225,000 new settlers will arrive.

With each passing month of the year Canada Northwest, Winnipeg and Manitoba are receiving the attention of the most prominent men in the world, who are forming investments that promise a financial center. Winnipeg has been classed in the year in banking percentages. The past year's total was $604,000,000. For the first month, and since 1902 our bank clearings have then quintuple. In 1902 they have increased to $604,983,914.

The Canadian Northern transcontinental, the old saying that "All roads lead to Rome," may be aptly applied to Winnipeg, for the city is the converging point for all lines of railway in Western Canada, and for the same reason as Rome before it was made Winnipeg is the hub upon which the commercial wheel of all Western Canada revolves.

During the present time we have the Canadian Pacific and Canadian Northern Railways with their transcontinental route of road; the Great Northern will construct their lines into Winnipeg, and the city this coming summer, and in the year or two the Grand Trunk Pacific will be transporting grain to the head of the Great Lakes. Active operations are now commenced on the construction of docks at St. Andrew's Rapids on the Red River, and when these are completed, which will be upon the very first day of navigation, the boat leaves of Lake Winnipeg to the upper reaches of the Red River, south of Winnipeg. In this manner large quantities of fish, lumber, cordwood, ethereals and ores will be distributed from Winnipeg.

As a location for manufacturers, Winnipeg is unrivalled. The city of Winnipeg is at present constructing a power plant on the falls of the Winnipeg River, from which electric power will be distributed at the very lowest cost to the consumers. Factory sites can be secured on the river front at low figure, and the fruits of success are here. Just watching the great and broad gauged men to come, and push them.

No only is Winnipeg a city, with almost possibilities for the money making line, but it is a city where to live. We have everything here that the heart of man could desire. During each year we have annually the same delightful summer climate, and during the winter months, from December to March inclusive, the only city in Canada where the weather is equal to that of Winnipeg, and the people are a jolly, good-natured, hospitable people. Everything in the way of sport is indulged in. While a large number of clubs are formed during the summer months. Those for tennis, golf, cricket, lacrosse, baseball, football, etc., each of which has a membership of from 100 to 500. Then during the winter months we have the grand old game of curling, which is the favorite sport of the Dominion owing to the purple of its climate.

There is a marked contrast in gathering in Winnipeg to that in the eastern cities because of the splendid opportunities for enjoyment. Everybody owns a horse, and they are all good ones, for they are all well bred thoroughbreds, or may be of the well bred optimistic type of Winnipeggers, which is invariably referred to by visitors to the city as a little heard it remarked somewhere else, "Work, wages, happiness" and perhaps this is the secret, for the people are a busy, prosperous, happy people.

I would like to let me say that at present any of your readers come to Winnipeg they should not fail to investigate the wonderful resources of the country that have made it possible what attempted to describe, for it would take a very lengthy account of a series of remarkable successes to do justice to the subject.

Yours sincerely,
PERRY W. MADDEN.

ADDINGTON ROAD.

It is with feelings of deepest regret that we chronicle this week what must touch the hearts of all, the death of an aged and highly esteemed resident, Mrs. Robert McGarvey. Deceased, who had recently celebrated her seventy-fifth birthday, was in her usual state of good health, and on Saturday, the 6th inst., was stricken with paralysis. For some time she had been confined to her bed, but her health outwardly was good, but until the last few days, when she passed calmly into an unconscious state, never to return to consciousness. For nearly half a century deceased was a faithful member of the Methodist church, and her life was a beautiful example of a consistent Christian character. She was born in Ireland, and came to Canada when a young girl, and was married to Robert McGarvey, who predeceased her about twenty years ago. Deceased was a woman of sterling worth, and was highly respected by all who knew her. She was a kind and loving mother, and her home was the abode of hospitality. She was a member of a family of eight children, all of whom survive her, viz.: Mrs. Robert McGarvey, Addington Road; Mrs. Wm. Mallow, Gretna, Man.; Mrs. Wm. Fraser, Fraserburg; Mrs. Richard Mallow, Deseronto; Mrs. John Mallow, Deseronto, and Messrs. Thomas and Robert McGarvey, Addington Road. The funeral took place on Tuesday, the 9th inst., to Addington cemetery, and was largely attended by relatives and friends. The pall bearers were Messrs. Wm. Mallow, Richard Mallow, Thomas McGarvey, Robert McGarvey, Wm. Fraser and Wm. Mallow, jr. The sympathy of the community is extended to the bereaved relatives.

Heart Strength

Heart Strength, or Heart Weakness, means Nerve Strength, or Nerve Weakness—nothing more. Positively and one would hear in a hundred it, is invariably diseased. It is almost always a disease that little nerve that really is all at fault. This is nerve—the Cardiac, or Heart Nerve strongly feeds, and that have, more power, more stability, more controlling, more governing strength. Without that the Heart must continue to fail, and the stomach and kidneys also have their same controlling nerves.

This clearly explains why, as a medicine, Dr. Shoop's Restorative has in the past done so much for weak and ailing Hearts. Dr. Shoop first sought the cause of all this painful, palpitating, suffocating heart distress. Dr. Shoop's Restorative—this peculiar prescription—is alone directed to those weak and wasting nerve centers. It builds; it strengthens; it offers real, positive heart help.

If you would have strong Hearts, strong digestion, strong [illegible] in those nerves—re-establish them so now. with started at some sound or some touch, like a man whose nervous system is painfully overstrung.

Maintaining his haste, he went deliberately forward, oblivious of the fact that at each step the curtain of darkness about him became closer, more tangible; that at each second the passersby jostled each other with greater frequency. Then, abruptly, with a sudden realisation of what had happened, he stood quite still. Without anticipation or preparation he had walked full into the thickness of the fog—a thickness so dense that, as by an enchanter's wand, the figures of a moment before melted, the street lamps were sucked up into the night.

His first feeling was a sense of panic at the sudden isolation, his second a thrill of nervous apprehension at the oblivion that had allowed him to be so entrapped. The second feeling outweighed the first. He moved forward, then paused again, uncertain of himself. Finally, with the consciousness that inaction was unbearable, he moved on once more, his eyes wide open, one hand thrust out as a protection and guide.

The fog had closed in behind him as heavily as in front, shutting off all possibility of retreat. All about him in the darkness was a confusion of voices —cheerful, dubious, alarmed or angry. Now and then a sleeve brushed his or a hand touched him tentatively. It was a strange moment, a moment of possibilities, to which the crunching wheels, the oaths and laughter from the blocked traffic of the roadway, made a continuous accompaniment.

Keeping well to the left Chilcote still beat on. There was a persistence in his movements that almost amounted to fore—a fear born of solitude filled with innumerable sounds. For a space he groped about him without result, then his fingers touched the cold surface of a shuttered shop front and a thrill of reassurance passed through him. With renewed haste and clinging to his landmark as a blind man might, he started forward with fresh impetus.

For a dozen paces he moved rapidly and unevenly, then the natural result occurred. He collided with a man coming in the opposite direction.

The shock was abrupt. Both men swore simultaneously, then both laughed. The whole thing was comical, but Chilcote was in that state of mind when even the commonplace becomes abnormal. The other utter exclamation, the other man's laugh, struck on his nerves. Coming out of the darkness, they sounded like a repetition of his own.

Nine out of every ten men in London, given the same social position and the same education, might reasonably be expected to express annoyance or amusement in the same manner; possibly in the same tone of voice, and Chilcote remembered this almost at the moment of his nervous jar.

"Beastly fog!" he said aloud. "I'm trying to find Grosvenor square, but the chances seem rather small."

The other laughed again, and again the laugh upset Chilcote. He wondered unconsciously if he was becoming a prey to illusions. But the stranger spoke before the question had solved itself.

"I'm afraid they are small," he said. "It would be almost hard to find one's way to the devil on a night like this."

Chilcote made a murmur of amusement and drew back against the shop. He was now more than ever like a blind man scores in the matter of salvation. This is almost a repetition of the fog of six years ago. Were you out in that?" It was a habit of his to jump from one sentence to another, a habit that had grown of late.

"No." The stranger had also groped his way to the shop front. "No, I was out of England six years ago."

"You were lucky." Chilcote turned up the collar of his coat. "It was an atrocious fog, as I remember it, but more universal. I remember it well. It was the night Lexington made his street singer speech. Some of us were found on Lambeth bridge at 3 in the morning, having left the house at 12."

Chilcote seldom indulged in reminiscences, but this conversation with an unseen companion was more like a soliloquy than a dialogue. He was almost surprised into an exclamation when the other caught up his words.

"Ah! The singer speech!" he said. "Odd that I should have been looking it up only yesterday. What a magnificent dressing up of a dry subject it was! What a career Lexington promised in those days!"

Chilcote changed his position.

"You are interested in the muddle down at Westminster?" he asked sarcastically.

"I?" It was the turn of the stranger to draw back a step. "Oh, I read my newspaper with the other 5,000,000, that is all. I am a colonist. His voice sounded curt. The warmth that admiration had brought into it a moment before had frozen abruptly. "An outsider!" Chilcote repeated. "What an enviable word!"

"Possibly, to those who are well inside the ring. But let us go back to Lexington. What a pinnacle the man reached, and what a drop he had! He has always seemed to me an extraordinary instance of the human leaven working through a mass. What was the real cause of his collapse?" he asked suddenly. "Was it drugs or drink? I have often wished to get the truth."

Again Chilcote changed his attitude.

"In truth ever worth getting at?" he said irrelevantly.

"In the case of a public man—yes. He exchanges his privacy for the interest of the masses. If he bores the masses the details of his success, why not the details of his failure? But was it drink that sucked him under?"

"No." Chilcote's response came after a pause.

"Drugs?"

Again Chilcote hesitated. And at the moment of his indecision a woman brushed past him laughing boisterously. The sound jarred him.

"Was it drugs?" the stranger went on easily. "I have always had a theory that it was."

"Yes. It was morphia." The answer came before Chilcote had realised it. The woman's laugh at the stranger's rude persistence had contrived to draw it from him. Instantly he had spoken he looked about him quickly, like one who has for a moment forgotten a necessary vigilance.

There was silence while the stranger thought over the information just given him. Then he spoke again, with a new touch of vehemence.

"So I imagined," he said, "though, on my soul, I never really credited it. To have gained so much and to have thrown it away for a common vice!" He made an exclamation of disgust.

Chilcote gave an unsteady laugh. "You judge hardly," he said.

The other repeated his sound of contempt. "Justly so. No man has the right to squander what another would give his right arm for. It lessens the general respect for power."

"You are a believer in power?" The tone was sarcastic, but the sarcasm sounded thin.

"Am I not? All power is the outcome of individuality, either past or present. I find no sentiment for the man who plays with it."

The quiet contempt of the tone stung Chilcote.

"Do you imagine that Lexington made no fight?" he asked impulsively. "Can't you picture the man's struggle while the vice that had been slave gradually became master?" His stopped to take breath, and in the cold pause that followed it seemed to him that the other made a murmur of incredulity.

"Perhaps you think of morphia as a pleasure?" he added. "Think of it, instead, as a tyrant that tortures, the mind if held to and the body if cast off." Urged by the darkness and the silence of his companion, the rein of his speech had loosened. In that moment he was not Chilcote, the member for East Wark, whose moods and silences were proverbial, but Chilcote the man whose mind craved the relief of speech.

"You talk as the world talks—out of ignorance and self righteousness," he went on. "Before you condemn Lexington you should put yourself in his place"—

"As you do?" the other laughed.

Unsuspecting and inoffensive as the laugh was it startled Chilcote. With a sudden alarm he pulled himself up.

"I?" He tried to echo the laugh, but the attempt fell flat. "Oh, I merely speak from—from Dr. Quincey. But I believe this fog is shifting—I really believe it is shifting. Can you oblige me with a light? I had almost forgotten that a man may still smoke though he has been deprived of sight." He spoke fast and disjointedly. He was overwhelmed by the idea that he had let himself go and possessed by the wish to obliterate the consequences. As he talked he fumbled for his cigarette case.

His head was bent as he searched for it nervously. Without looking up he was conscious that the cloud of fog that held him prisoner was lifting, rolling away, closing back again, preparatory to final disappearance. Having found the case, he put a cigarette between his lips and raised his hand at the moment that the stranger drew a match across his box.

For a second each stared blankly at the other's face, suddenly made visible by the lifting of the fog. The match in the stranger's hand burned down till it scorched his fingers, and, feeling the pain, he laughed and let it drop.

"Of all odd things!" he said. Then he broke off. The circumstance was too novel for ordinary remark.

By one of those rare occurrences, those chances that seem too wild for actual life and yet belong to no other sphere, the two faces so strangely hidden and strangely revealed were identical, from the eyebrows to the chin, to each man that he looked not at the face of another, but at his own face reflected in a flawless looking glass.

Of the two the stranger was the first to regain self possession. Seeing Chilcote's bewilderment, he came to his rescue with brusque tactfulness.

"The position is decidedly odd," he said. "But, after all, why should we be surprised? Nature can't be eternally original. She must dry up sometimes, and when she gets a good model why shouldn't she use it twice? He drew back, surveying Chilcote whim-

Open Letter.

TO CHAS. ANDERSON, ESQ., REEVE, AND WORTHY COUNCILLORS OF THE TOWNSHIP OF STRATHCONA.

Gentlemen,—Having been appointed by you as delegate to meet a deputation of rural school trustees in Toronto, on March 27th, from various school boards of the Province, to wait upon Dr. Pyne, Minister of Education, for the purpose of laying before that gentleman the views of supporters of rural schools regarding matters under his charge, and to urge the repeal of the obnoxious clauses in the new School Act, beg leave to report as follows:

On my arrival in the city, I awaited upon the member for Lennox at his hotel, to secure his co-operation, and found that he thought the new Act was the best the Province ever had, and that the efforts of the deputation would be futile.

The deputation met in the reception room of the Education Department at 10 o'clock, arranging for their various grievances before the Minister, some of which time the Honorable Minister of Education put in an appearance, when each one of the delegates had to say. The deputation numbered over thirty, and proceeded to present their grievances, which were not many, as they knew that I will only take time to deal with. Chief of which, Ministerial interference by forced, compound, or trustees of rural schools by such inspectors as district, and that a delegate from each of these Associations be a member of the Ontario Educational Association, which meets once a year in Toronto. Control of site and equipment was voiced in the following: That rural school trustees are more interested in the efficiency of rural schools than anybody else; that they pay the taxes, and that the department should limit the powers of the Inspectors to that of an advisory capacity only, for the reason that they are not practical men, and that every school board is perfectly competent to look after them, will be responsible for the cost of putting in the sites, and to have nothing to do with the building.

That when Model schools are no more in vogue and that the course in training is completed to finish in Normal Schools, a small city is paying increased expense which many will be unable to bear, and that the Ontario Government bears the expenses of Normal Schools, and Military schools; that the Department of Education should not be the chamber in which any sum as would be at least $1,000,000 per year be voted away for schools at home.

That the power of County Councils opposite dismiss and control Inspectors, should be repealed, and that there be no increase in the salary of the Inspectors, as the present salary is sufficient and totally unearned for.

That no rural school supporters are wholly opposed to any consolidation of the number of schools, but we believe our teacher should be well paid, and therefore up to $400 or $450, as we have to furnish the finest, and we very rarely find them are totally ignored in the matter. Take Dr. Pyne, he is paid $8,000 per year, no better than an Indian on the overthrow of Confederation, and Mr. Ross, $6,000 per year. No class of people, no they are merchandise, or farmers, are so competent that their individual salaries should be so much so as the profession is identical so much so as the profession is identical so much so as the profession is identical

Long Gloves—Kid and Fabric May be Scarce.

You all know what a time you had getting long gloves last summer. Well, a year ago now we had lots of them. City houses were sold out weeks ahead of us. We filled orders by mail from far and near. Again we say, buy what you need now. Assortments will not be better and prices have the tendency to increase.

New White Waist Patterns.

Last week we secured some novelties that were just out from Switzerland and Ireland. Real Irish Linen embroidered, insertions of Baby Irish lace, with plain material to match. Pattern complete, $5.00.

The Swiss goods are very new designs of embroidery on fine Swiss muslin. Patterns complete, $2.00 to $4.00.

Tickings—Extra Value at 20c and 25c yard.

At 20c yard—The usual kind at this price is hard and full of dressing. This lot is closely woven and free of starch.

At 25c yard—We recommend our famous Featherstop brand, none better at the price.

Colored Curtain Materials.

House cleaning time is when you discover curtain needs. For bedrooms, library and dens we notice a growing tendency to use colored curtains. We are showing more variety than ever in Art Muslin, Art Drapery and Art Cretonnes. No need to go into the expensive kinds unless you wish. Because price ranges from 6c yard to 85c yard. Fringes in silk and mercerised just in to match, 10c and 25c yard.

Tasseled Rope Portiers.

We are selling agents for the factory that makes Rope Portiers. If we have not the color or size you wish in stock, we can make to your order. If you require one for an arch or doorway, bring measurement of width and height and we will quote you the exact price. (In carpet department 1st floor.)

Table Linens.

At Present Prices—A Gold Mine.

Don't hesitate to buy table linens at our present prices. All indications point to a stiff advance. Values that we are able to give you in table linens now will in all probability not be repeated for many a day. If you are a careful housekeeper do not pass this item without finding exactly how your linen closet stands. Hotel keepers and others who use large quantities better be on the alert. Old prices can only prevail just as long as present stocks last. We have pattern table cloths with napkins to match, in sets from $5.00 to $12.50.

Bleached Damasks from 35c to $1.50 yd. Half bleached damasks, 25c to 50c yd. Doyliez, Tray and Tea Cloths, Centre Pieces, Sideboard Scarfs, and Carvers, in a splendid assortment.

Change of season will bring to light the gaps in your stock of pillow cases and sheetings. We have Pillow Cottons in all widths from 40 inch to 50 inches wide, plain and even circular, 15c to 25c yard.

Bleached Sheetings, plain and twilled. Up to a certain price we find the Canadian made sheetings to be the better value. Above that price we prefer English and Scotch made sheetings with a linen finish.

Our Women's Ready-to-Wear Section.

Don't worry if your favorite dressmaker is too busy to serve you. Because we have right here in our midst a stock of Ready-to-wear garments that gives you great wealth of choice. Carpets and House Furnishing Business is Extra Good.

The general prosperity of our county is reflected in the way our people are buying carpets. Nearly every farm house in the county is fixing up. Many months ago we placed very large contracts for carpets. It was a lucky stroke of business for us. Not a yard can be repeated at old prices to-day. If you are interested let us show you how well we are ready to serve you. In the matter of Carpets, Curtains, Rugs, Linoleums, Floor Oilcloths, we have "the goods" to back up everything we say. This section being on first floor gives you more room in selecting. Rugs, carpets and draperies are not exposed to much dust, and we have the best of light and lots of it.

Are You a Good Seamstress? Do You Want Work?

We want more workers, more help in our different departments. Good reliable women and young ladies whom we can train up to make good garments you are competent we will pay you well. We have plenty of work for many more hands than we have, and we are compelled to turn away much work that we could do had we the help.

COATMAKERS WANTED—We want more good tailors to turn out coats in our Tailoring Department. Can you do a first-class job? If you can we want you, and if you will follow instructions we will promise to make you a still better coatmaker than you have ever been.

ENERGETIC CITIZEN VS. EARLY CLOSING BY-LAW.

Napanee, April 18th, 1907.

To the Editor of your kind paper, I take this space in your columns to express my thoughts and views on the question of the early-closing by-law, which is now before the people of our town. This question will become of great importance to the business men of our town, as it is a question which affects the welfare of the whole community. A town's position depends largely upon the prosperity of its business, and facilities, and the encouraging of same. Therefore, we, as citizens of the business portion of the town of Napanee, are desirous of having the public at large act according to our wishes in this matter.

We contend that early closing would be a detriment to the business of this town. The decision will become of great importance to the farmers, as it will affect the trade with the latter. Many farmers will be compelled to go to their work in order to get their necessary commodities, and so on. The result will be a great loss to the business men of this townkeeper. Why should the business men of this town be compelled to lose a certain portion of our business, which is rightfully theirs, and which is gained by years of hard work and study in the week in which we live.

We are perfectly willing to close our doors, at a reasonable hour, but we contend that the present hour is the most suitable, and we are willing to abide by the decision of the majority of the ratepayers, as we feel sure that the future result of such a by-law will be disastrous.

In the welfare of the whole town we are deeply interested, and we will do all in our power to put down anything which we think will be detrimental to the welfare of the town.

WAR

Between Japan

This is a topic which is engaging the attention of the reading public to-day. Japan will undoubtedly do well to consider before she takes the step. She should not allow herself to be foolishly infatuated with pride over her recent victories and esteem all countries—Russians.

However, be that as it may, what we shou'd consider is the excellent value

Heredity Triumphant

By Alice Lovett Carson

Copyright, 1906, by E. C. Parcells

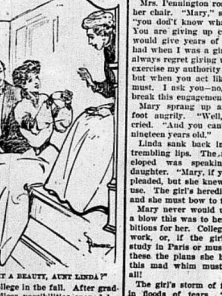
A shrill whistle echoed along the sunny avenue. Mary Dexter jumped from her seat on the piazza, scattering embroidery silks in all directions. She waved her handkerchief in response. Then she ran into the house calling: "Aunt Linda! Where are you? Here's Dave Green to see you!"

Without waiting for a reply she returned to the porch just in time to greet the young man who came up the steps. "Glad to see me, Mary?" he asked as with a hasty glance around she put up her face for a kiss. Then the two sat down on the top step in earnest, subdued conversation. Mary Dexter was a maid of nineteen with a fresh peachbloom complexion. Today, wearing a simple white frock, she looked her best—and knew it.

In a few minutes an elderly woman came out the front door. Her hair, worn as a coronet, was silvery white though she was only forty. Age had touched her face lightly, pressing in the wrinkles with loving fingers that left only sweetness in the expression. Humor told a romantic tale of Linda Pennington's life, and for once rumor was right. A girlish engagement with a young army officer who fell in his first battle, a few years as a nurse in the war, interrupted by a marriage with Lyall Pennington, early widowhood and a subsequent life devoted to good work—these were among the incidents in her story. For many years all her plans had been for Mary, whom she had adopted long ago.

Mrs. Pennington had taken a great interest in Mary because she came from her own town, and the case of the child was particularly pitiful, for there were no near relatives to whom she could be sent.

Fresh from the sadness caused by the death of her husband, Linda found the child's companionship a great comfort. Mary had passed serenely through the stages of childhood and youth and now, at nineteen, under the training of private tutors, was prepared to enter



"ISN'T IT A BEAUTY, AUNT LINDA?"

Merton college in the fall. After graduation endless possibilities opened before her. This was the situation that July morning when Mrs. Pennington came out on the porch and greeted young David Green, one of Mary's admirers.

He was a manly fellow of twenty-one, son of a prosperous farmer of the rural district. He had his pick it up, on a good sized tract of land by his father, with the instruction to "see what he could do with it," and he was doing well.

"You've just come back from New York, haven't you, David?" asked Mrs. Pennington.

"Yes," said Mary. "He's been away two whole days."

The sigh with which this was said brought a laugh from the other two. Mrs. Pennington seated herself in the rocker.

"Why, Mary," she said, "is this your embroidery on the floor? Pick it up before it gets dirty."

The girl leaned back comfortably against the railing. She did pick it up, Dave," she said indifferently. And the young man did so. But Linda bit her lip in vexation. It was a little thing, but characteristic of the way Mary made all her friends wait on her.

"Did you go away on business, David?" she asked hastily.

"No—yes—well, I don't know as you'd call it exactly business."

"I should," said Mary decidedly—"the most important business for you just now, Dave." The lad laughed, embarrassed.

"Dear me, this sounds very mysterious," said Mrs. Pennington, smiling. "What is it all about?"

"I went to get something for Mary," said David.

"And here it is," said the girl, holding out her left hand. "Isn't it a beauty, Aunt Linda?" A handsome solitaire flashed into view.

The significance of the stone did not enter Linda Pennington's mind, for it was many years since she had thought of such things. "Mary, you know you may not receive presents of jewelry from young men," she was beginning, but the words died on her lips. Mary and David, looking for some sign of approval, read in her face grief, disappointment and refusal.

"Aren't you pleased?" went on the girl, pitifully. "We've been engaged since Christmas. Before I visited Florrie Tucker, Dave asked me and I said, 'I'd see.' Then while I was away he kept writing to me—and I always did like him best of any of the boys—so I just had to say 'yes.' He's so obstinate, Dave is, he wouldn't take 'no.'"

"Of course I am very much surprised," Linda said when she could trust herself to speak. "I think you are both too young to talk of such things. Besides, you are going to college soon, Mary, and I do not approve of indefinite engagements."

"But there's nothing indefinite about our engagement," replied the girl airily, twisting the ring on her finger. "We are to be married in September."

"What?"

"Oh, yes, it's all settled," nodding her head. "I wrote this morning to Merton canceling my application. I'm tired of study—what is the use of it? I know more now than any other girl or boy almost—in Dorsettown. Just think, after September I'll never have to study any more!"

Mrs. Pennington rose in wrath from her chair. "Mary," she cried sharply, "you don't know what you're saying. You are giving up carelessly what I would give years of my life to have had when I was a girl—and you'll always regret giving up. I don't often exercise my authority as your guardian, but when you act like a silly child I must. I ask you—no, I order you—to break this engagement."

Mary sprang up and stamped her foot angrily. "Well, I won't!" she cried. "And you can't make me; I'm nineteen today!"

Linda sank back in the chair with trembling lips. The mother who had eloped was speaking through her daughter. "Mary, if you love me," she pleaded, but she knew it would be no use. The girl's face was hard and set, and she must bow to the inevitable.

Mary never would understand what a blow this was to her guardian's ambitions for her. College, then advanced work, or, if the girl preferred, art study in Paris or music in Germany—these the plans she had made. And this mad whim must overturn them all!

The girl's storm of fury spent itself in floods of tears. "Aunt Linda, I can't. Don't ask me to," she sobbed.

David drew his sweetheart toward him. He had been a silent, troubled witness of the scene. Now he spoke quietly.

"It's like this, Mrs. Pennington, we love each other, and we don't see the use of waiting. If we wait four years by then we'll have grown apart perhaps, and it will be harder to give in to each other. We want to be married at once. I am making a good living; my people are pleased, and we only want your consent."

But she shook her head impatiently. "I have nothing against you, David, but—it is impossible."

"Oh, no, Mrs. Pennington!" he cried. "Think—think—when you were young and in love. Don't you remember how it was then?"

How old memories can rise again! A vision of a boy with golden curls pleading eyes and tender smile. And that parting—could she ever forget the pain of his voice, now and thrilling? She gave a shuddering sigh and opened tear dimmed eyes. "I was only seventeen and he was twenty-one and I never saw him again. His body could not be found. Ah!" Steadying her voice, she went on. "You are right, David. It was foolish and wrong to try to control Mary's life. She must work it out for herself. My plans were all different from this, but I can give them up, as I have given up others."

"Dear Mrs. Pennington," said David, grasping her hand.

Then, when Mary ran off to set the supper table and David followed, with awkward attempts to help, Linda Pennington drew forth an old locket and gazed long at the portrait within. "Once I thought that the shattering of my dreams would kill me," she murmured. "But I lived to thank God for other dreams and duties that came. It will be now, I think."

"Supper is ready, Aunt Linda!" called Mary, and Mrs. Pennington turned from the sunset glow.

A Welsh Rip.

Every nation has a Rip Van Winkle of its own, but the Welsh story of Rip is unique. He is known as Hugh Sion. One morning Taffy heard a bird singing on a tree close by his path. Allured by the melody, he sat down until the music ceased. When he arose, what was his surprise at observing that his once tender whisk had taken a seat had now become dead and withered! In the doorway of his cot, which, in passing, he entered, he also suddenly grown older, he asked of a strange old man for his parents, whom he had left there, as he said, a few minutes before. Upon hearing his name the old man said: "Alas, Taffy, I have often heard my grandfather, your father, speak of you, and it was said you were under the power of the fairies and would not be released until the last any of that sycamore had dried up. Embrace me, my dear uncle—for you are my uncle—embrace your nephew." Welshmen do not always perceive the humor of this somewhat novel situation of a youth—for Taffy was still merely a boy—being hailed as uncle by a gentleman perhaps forty years his senior.

Fun For Him.

Askum—Who was that man who stopped to talk to you? Dubley—That's my old barber. Askum—Does he usually stop you on the street. Dubley—No, but he knows I'm sharing myself now and he just wanted to look at my face and gloat over me.—Atlanta Constitution.

INDIGESTION CURED.
BY DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS AFTER SIX DOCTORS HAD FAILED TO BE OF BENEFIT.
That gnawing pain in the stomach, sometimes shooting up into the chest, often producing a choking sensation in the throat; fierce pains around the heart; a feeling of drowsiness and a distaste for food—that's indigestion. Its victims are numbered by the thousands. To them life is a burden. Mr. Wilmot Parker, Ont., have done more towards relieving this suffering than any other medicine. Often they have cured after all other help had failed, as in the case of Mr. Willis Herman, of St. Catharines, Ont. Mr. Herman had been afflicted with indigestion and stomach trouble for years. At times the suffering was almost unbearable. Sometimes he was unable to retain food. Good doctors at different times was treated by six doctors but got little or no help. I was living in New York, and while there consulted a specialist but he was unable to give me any relief. I then decided to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and in less than a month I felt some relief. I continued them for a couple of months longer and gained in weight; my appetite improved; the pains left me and I now feel better than I have at any time during the past twenty-five years. I will always gladly recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to other sufferers believing that they will work as well for others as they have done for me."
When you use Dr. Williams' Pink Pills as a blood builder and nerve tonic you are not experimenting, for they have been tried and proved successful in thousands of cases in their power to actually make new, rich red blood that enables them to cure such troubles as anaemia, indigestion, heart palpitation, kidney trouble, the after effects of la grippe, headache and backache, partial paralysis, St. Vitus dance, erysipelas, scrofula, blood and nervous diseases, and many other forms of weakness. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all the symptoms of approaching womanhood or the decline into old age. Sold by all druggists or sent post paid at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by addressing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Oyster Cocktail.

A good recipe for an oyster cocktail which is simple to make and does not take long is to put the small and thoroughly chilled bivalves in a wineglass, covering them with a sauce composed of a spicy catchup, lemon juice and some freshly grated horseradish.

Trousers in their present shape were introduced into the British army in 1813 and tolerated as a legitimate portion of evening dress in 1816.

Child Betrothals.

To be an old maid in Greece is to bring everlasting disgrace on the family name, so the children are betrothed in childhood, the mother of the girl looking about immediately after the child's birth for a future family with a little boy. Seldom are these engagements broken in after life.

The Camel.

A camel can easily carry a weight of 1,000 pounds on its back, about four times as much as a horse can carry. The camel begins work at the age of four and is useful for half a century. The horse, as a rule, is nearly played out at the age of fifteen.

Striking Clocks.

According to historians, the first striking clock was imported into Europe by the Persians about 800 A. D. It was brought as a present to Charlemagne from Abdella, king of Persia, by two monks of Jerusalem.

Ranji In New Role.

Prince Ranjitsinhji, the famous cricketer, has been selected by the Government of India to succeed to the chieftain of Nawanagar. The late chief died last August without heirs. Prince Ranjitsinhji's official title now is Jam of Nawanagar. The new Jam is in his thirty-fifth year, having been born on September 10, 1872, in the province of Kathiawar. He was adopted by his father, Jam Sir Sahaji Raumalji, K. C. S. I., the elder Jam of Nawanagar, but on this chief's death his claim to succeed had to give way to a natural son, Kumar Jarwant Singhji, who, after a reign of eight years died, last August. Since that time the interval has been taken up in deciding rival claims. Nawanagar, which has about the same area as Sussex, is the largest of the kingdoms of Kathiawar under British protection. Its population exceeds 300,000, there is a little army of 3,250, the revenue is about £160,000 per annum.

Unclaimed British Prize Money.

The days when prize money was looked upon by the navy as an ordinary source of income are recalled by a notification from the Admiralty of money waiting to be claimed by the heirs of boatswains for the destruction of pirate craft and the sale of slave ships.

There is a sum of £5,000 from the sale of slaving vessels captured in the Pacific awaiting claimants, and a goodly amount of naval prize money and £2,-460 bounty for the destruction of pirates which nobody applies for. Some of those to whom money is due are, no doubt, still alive, but if they are dead they probably left descendants, who if the names were advertised would be forthcoming to substantiate their claims.

As it is, there is little demand for the money in hand. During twelve months only £4 in all was paid out.—Court Journal.

Belt and Marriage.

Belt, the South African Croesus who died not long ago, was said to be much averse to the marriage of young men in his employ. At one time his secretary asked for a holiday to get married. Mr. Belt replied: "If you get married I shall require your services anymore. You can't serve me as I want to be served and you can't look after your wife as you ought to if you serve me properly. Come in later and let Sport what you are going to do." Next day the secretary explained that he had determined to wed. His services were dispensed with then and there, but just before the wedding Mr. Belt sent for him and when he appeared and handed him an envelope, not to be opened until after the wedding. It contained a cheque for £5,000 and a note admiring the young man's courage.—London Truth.

To Measure Molecules.

An apparatus by measuring the seventy millionth part of an inch has been made by Dr. P. Shaw of Nottingham, England, says the London Chemical World Magazine. It works upon the principle of electric touch and consists of a fine micrometer screw and six levers. The apparatus is so sensitive and delicate that it is impossible to manipulate it before an audience. It is hung by rubber bands, covered with thick felt, and must be worked at dead of night, when there is no traffic in the street vibrating. The minute distance that this mechanism measures is the distance between a solid and a liquid molecule. Dr. Shaw's invention was first made in 1906, but its great improvement of late has made it the wonder of physicists throughout the world.

The Benefit.

A well-known medical man was attending an old Irish woman who lived in one of the poorer quarters of Edinburgh. He found her in a bad case of valescent, when one day she said to the doctor:

"Will ye tell me, doctor, dear, for certain, whether I'll get well again or no?"

"Oh, yes. I think you'll be all right soon now," was the answer.

"I wanted to know for sure, ye see, doctor, because I'm a lone woman, an' I subscribe to a burying club, an' I just wished to know if I was likely to be gettin' my benefit out of it or no."

The Merry Microbe.

The London Lancet has been warning its readers against the table implements at restaurants, the odor handles of public places and vehicles and above all, the coin of the realm. The merry microbe thrives on these unnutritious substances, it seems, and takes a malevolent delight in imparting all manner of diseases to the unwary. Knowing from experience that The Lancet approves of few things to eat and drink, a contemporary suggests the human race live in balloons and subsist on chemical compounds.

The London Cabby.

The taximeter system has been introduced in London, and one of the papers has secured a cabby how he liked it. "You see," said the cabman frankly, "most of us likes a bit o' sport. I like my 'bob and a tanner,' and I don't know whether I'm going' to make my yard money or 'ave a quid over for meself. You tike me's meanin'? It's like backin' 'osses." All the cabby wants is a sporting chance."

A Mother's Message to Mothers.
WHAT ZAM-BUK DID FOR HER CHILD.
"If this statement is the means of helping some mother to introduce Zam-Buk to her home, I shall be very glad," so says Mrs. Watkins, of 26 Forgue Avenue, Montreal, and continues, "My boy, Percy, aged 9, while attending school, contracted some bad blood trouble. The result was he had that some of them on the head and ankle made it impossible for him to walk. I used various ointments, but the sores got worse. One day Zam-Buk was recommended, and we got a supply. I soon found that the soreness out of the place to which the Zam-Buk was applied, and the wounds began to heal. In about a week the sores, which had now inflicted other treatment, were completely healed, and there was not a trace of sore on his body! I believe Zam-Buk to be the best blood purifier sold."
When a mother runs to the doctor with her children it is only on rare occasions to be grateful as if it were Zam-Buk that has been used. Invariably Zam-Buk is put—even for all ailments—to all sorts of uses, and may be applied with wonderful benefit even to the skin of young babes. Zam-Buk paste soon cures eczema, ringworm, itch, barber's rash, blood poison, bad leg, ulcers, abrasions, abscesses, cuts, burns, scalds, chapped skin, piles and eczemas. Of all stores and druggists at 50 cents a box, or post free from the proprietors, for price, 6 boxes for $2.50. Rowsell players and athlete find it best embrocation.

WELSH WEDDINGS.

When One Had to Catch His Bride After Winning Her.

A wedding as it was customarily arranged in Wales some half a century ago was an interesting affair.

In those days, as soon as the young people had made up their minds, before they could speak of a wedding in the course of the bride's parents had to be obtained. This arrangement, however, was easily settled with the Gofyn-y-ferch and could be effected in various ways. Sometimes the young man's friends called on the parents of the bride to make the proposal, sometimes the young man himself went, and sometimes he wrote a letter, which was duly answered by the parents. Sometimes the fair lady's whims and caprices made the delay in unlocking the door very long. When the door was open the bride was still to be found.

She had taken refuge in some other corner of the house, where she was crouching out of sight, completely covered by a long cloak. This game of hide and seek was sometimes so prolonged that when the bride was found it was too late to be married that day, but this did not happen often. Sometimes the bride was really found, there was a great mounting of horses. She, in her modest cloak, was seated behind her father and all the company set off as fast as their steeds could go, all trying to reach the mother, who seldom, if ever, attended her daughter to the wedding.

The bill and down dale, over smooth and rough ground, the mountain ponies carried the bride and the bridegroom if he and his friends did not reach the church before the bride. Service over, the bridegroom had still to keep guard over his wife, for in one country parish, if not in many, it was the custom for friends of the young man to wait outside the church until the service was over. When the happy pair appeared, the bride was seized and placed behind one of the men, who galloped off with her.

Naturally she was hotly pursued by the bridegroom, who, of course, had an exciting chase, eventually captured her. Not at last the wife was secured she took her seat behind her husband and on his own horse, and the company rode off again to the bridegroom's home. Arrived at the house, all dismounted and drank the health of bride and bridegroom out of the same pewter.—London Standard.

The Best Flour,
Dafoe's Monarch,
Dafoe's Manitoba Patent
By numerous tests by the best bakers these above mentioned grades have been proven to be the best flours for family use.
When buying flour, ask for Dafoe's, and try your home mill, thereby producing Bread and Flour that is for each purpose cheaper than the product of the Western mills, which has to be shipped thousands of miles at great expense and handled by several grades of middlemen's profits.
The grocer complains if the farmer or the mechanic sends in Toronto or outside points for an article he can get at the home grocer, as grocer but he does not hesitate to buy flour from the thousands of miles away and sell you an inferior flour for which you have paid cash, purchase the home product for, every bag of which is guaranteed.
Choice corn meal and buckwheat flour always on hand. Feed grinding a specialty, with the best feed mills known to the trade.
A full stock of the best Anthracite coal; also in the market for the purchase of all kinds of grain.
Phone 61. Office on the Big Mill, before purchasing your Flour, Feed or Coal.
